PULSA'TOR. n. s. [from pulso, Lat.] A striker, a beater.

PU'LSE. n. s. [pulsus, Lat.]

1. The motion of an artery as the blood is driven through it by the heart, and as it is perceived by the touch.

Pulse is thus accounted for: when the left ventricle of the heart contracts, and throws its blood into the great artery, the blood in the artery is not only thrust forward towards the extremities, but the channel of the artery is likewise dilated, because fluids, when they are pressed, press again to all sides, and their pressure is always perpendicular to the sides of the containing vessels; but the coats of the artery, by any small impetus, may be distended: therefore, upon the contraction or systole of the heart, the blood from the left ventricle will not only press the blood in the artery forwards, but both together will distend the sides of the artery: when the impetus of the blood against the sides of the artery ceases, that is, when the left ventricle ceases to contract, then the spiral fibres of the artery, by their natural elasticity, return again to their former state, and contract the channel of the artery, till it is again dilated by the diastole of the heart: this diastole of the artery is called its pulse, and the time the spiral fibres are returning to their natural state, is the distance between two pulses: this pulse is in all the arteries of the body at the same time; for, while the blood is thrust out of the heart into the artery, the artery being full, the blood must move in all the arteries at the same time; and because the arteries are conical, and the blood moves from the basis of the cone to the apex, therefore the blood must strike against the sides of the vessels, and consequently every point of the artery must be dilated at the same time that the blood is thrown out of the left ventricle of the heart, and as soon as the elasticity of the spiral fibres can overcome the impetus of the blood, the arteries are again contracted: thus two causes operating alternately, the heart and fibres of the arteries, keep the blood in a continual motion. an high pulse is either vehement or strong, but if the dilatation of the artery does not rise to its usual height, it is called a low or weak pulse; but if between its dilatations there passes more time than usual, it is called a slow pulse: again, if the coats of an artery feel harder than usual from any cause whatsoever, it is called an hard pulse, but if by any contrary cause they are softer, then it is called a soft pulse Quincy.

Think you, I bear the shears of destiny?
Have I commandment on the pulse of life? Shakesp.

I never saw a better fashion'd gown,
More quaint, more pleasing, nor more commendable. Shak.

4. Smoky, escheated, finespun.
I'll speak of fays,
Like a fine bragging youth, and tell quaint lies,
How honourable ladies sought my love,
Which I denying they fell sick and died. Shakesp.
He his fabrick of the heavens
His laughter at their quaint opinions wide
Hereafter. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

5. Quaint is, in Spenser, quailed; depressed. I believe by a very licentious irregularity
With which fair flight from Guyon fast he fled
Till at the last, all breathless, weary and faint,
Him spying, with fresh onset he assail'd,
And kindling new his courage, seeming quaint,
Struck him so hugely, that through great constraint
He made him stoop. Fairy Queen, b. v.

6. Affected, foppish. This is not the true idea of the word, which Skinner seems not to have well understood

I will never forget thy commandments; for with them thou haſt quickened me. Pſalm cxix.

This my mean taſk would be
As heavy to me, as odious, but
The riches which I ſerve, quickens with duties,
And makes my labours pleaſures. Shakeſp. Timon.

To quicken with killing, had my lips that power,
Thus would I wear them out. Shakeſp. Ant. and Cleop.

Fair ſoul, ſince to the faireſt body join'd
You give each living life, ſuch quick'ning pow'r,
And influence of ſuch celeſtial kind,
As keeps it freſh in youth's immortal flower. Davies.

He throws
His influence round, and kindles as he goes;
Hence flocks and herds, and men, and beaſts and fowls
With breath are quickened, and attract their ſouls. Dryden.

2. To haſten, to accelerate

You may ſooner by imagination quicken or ſtack a motion, than raiſe or ceaſe it; as it is eaſier to make a dog go ſlower, than to make him ſtand ſtill. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.

Others were appointed to conſider of penal laws and proclamations in force, and to quicken the execution of the moſt principal. Hayward

Though any commodity ſhould ſhift hands never ſo faſt, it, if they did not ceaſe to be any longer traffick, this would not at all make or quicken their vent. L.

QUI'CKSIGHTEDNESS. n. ſ. [from quickſighted.] Sharpneſs of ſight.

The ignorance that is in us no more hinders the knowledge that is in others, than the blindneſs of a mole is an argument againſt the quickſightedneſs of an eagle. Locke.

QUI'CKSILVER. n. ſ. [quick and ſilver; argentum vivum, Lat.]

Quickſilver, called mercury by the chymiſts, is a naturally fluid mineral, and the heavieſt of all known bodies next to gold, and is the more heavy and fluid, as it is more pure, its nature is ſo homogene and ſimple, that it is a queſtion whether gold itſelf be more ſo. It penetrates the parts of all the other metals, renders them brittle, and in part diſſolves them. It is wholly volatile in the fire, and may be driven up in vapour by a degree of heat very little greater than that of boiling water: it is the leaſt tenacious of all bodies, and every ſmaller drop may be again divided by the lighteſt touch into a multitude of others, and is the moſt divilible of all bodies. mercury very readily mixes with gold, ſilver, lead and tin, by chymical operations, but not without difficulty with copper and iron; and it mixes eaſily with zink and biſmuth among the ſemimetals. the ſpecifick gravity of pure mercury is to water as 14020 to 1000 and as it is the heavieſt of all fluids, it is alſo the coldeſt, and when heated the hotteſt of the various ores, in which mercury is found, cinnabar is the richeſt and moſt valuable, which is extremely heavy, and of a bright and beautiful red colour. native cinnabar is principally found in the mines of Idria, belonging to the Venetians, in Italy, and ſome others in Spain, Hungary, and the Eaſt Indies. quickſilver is alſo found ſometimes in its pure and fluid ſtate lodged in cavities of hard ſtones in the cinnabar mines, and the purer ores are chiefly compoſed of cinnabar in ſmall quantities, mixed with various other ſubſtances. the ancients all eſteemed quickſilver a poiſon, nor was it brought into internal uſe till about two hundred and twenty years ago, which was firſt occaſioned by the ſhepherds, who ventured to give it their ſheep to kill worms, and as they received no hurt by it, it was ſoon concluded, that men might take it ſafely. in time, the diggers in the mines, when they found it crude, ſwallowed it in vaſt quantities, in order to ſell it privately, when they had voided it by ſtool: but too free a uſe of ſo powerful a medicine cannot be always without danger: the miners ſeldom follow their occupation above three or four years, and then die in a moſt miſerable condition; and the artificers, who have much dealing in it, are generally ſeized with paralytick diſorders: however, under proper regulation, it is a moſt excellent medicine. Hill's Materia Medica.

Mercury is very improperly called a metal, for though it has weight and ſimilarity of parts, it is neither diſſolvable by fire, malleable nor fixed. it ſeems to conſtitute a particular claſs of foſſils, and is rather the mother or baſis of all metals, than a metal itſelf: mercury is of conſiderable uſe in gilding, making looking glaſſes, in refining gold, and various other mechanical operations beſides medicine. Chambers.

Cinnabar maketh a beautiful purple like unto a red roſe; the beſt was wont to be made in Libia of brimſtone and quickſilver burnt. Peacham on Drawing.

QUI'CKSILVERED. adj. [from quickſilver.] Overlaid with quickſilver.

Metal is more difficult to poliſh than glaſs, and is afterwards very apt to be ſpoiled by tarniſhing, and reflects not ſo much light as glaſs quickſilvered over does. I would propound to uſe inſtead of the metal a glaſs ground concave on the foreſide, and as much convex on the backſide, and quickſilvered over on the convex ſide. Newton's Opticks.

QUI'DAM. [Latin.] Somebody.

For envy of ſo many worthy quidams, which catch at the garland, which to you alone is due, you will be perſuaded to pluck out of the hateful darkneſs thoſe ſo many excellent poems of yours, which lie hid, and bring them forth to eternal light. Spenſer.

QUI'DDANY. n. ſ. [cydonium, cydoniatum, Lat. quidden, German, a quince.] Marmalade; confection of quinces made with ſugar.

QUI'DDITY. n. ſ. [quiditas, low Latin.]

1. Eſſence, that which is a proper anſwer to the queſtion, quid eſt? a ſcholaſtick term.

He could reduce all things to acts,
And know their natures and abſtracts,
Where entity and quiddity,
The ghoſts of defunct bodies fly. Hudibras, p. i.

2. A trifling nicety; a cavil, a captious queſtion.

Mis-nomer in our laws, and other quiddities, I leave to the profeſſors of law. Camden's Remains.

QUI'ESCENCE. n. ſ. [from quieſco, Lat.] Reſt, repoſe.

Whether the earth move or reſt, I undertake not to determine: my work is to prove, that the common inducement to the belief of its quieſcence, the teſtimony of ſenſe, is weak and frivolous. Glanvill's Scepſ.

QUIE'SCENT. adj. [quieſcent, Latin.] Reſting, not being in motion; not moving, lying at repoſe.

Though the earth move, its motion muſt needs be as inſenſible as if it were quieſcent. Glanvill's Scepſ.

The right ſide, from whence the motion of the body beginneth, is the active or moving ſide; but the ſiniſter is the weaker or more quieſcent ſide. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Sight takes in at a greater diſtance and more variety at once, comprehending alſo quieſcent objects, which hearing does not. Holder's Elements of Speech.

If it be in ſome part movent, and in ſome part quieſcent, it muſt needs be a curve line, and ſo no rad us. Grew.

Preſſion or motion cannot be propagated in a fluid in right lines beyond an obſtacle which ſtops part of the motion, but will bend and ſpread every way into the quieſcent medium, which lies beyond the obſtacle. Newton's Opticks.

QUIET. adj. [quiet, Fr. quietus, Latin.]

1. Still; free from diſturbance.

Breaking off the end for want of breath,
And ſlyding ſoft, as down to ſleep her laid,

Or air, or fire, or earth, or water find?
What alchymiſt can draw, with all his ſkill,
The quinteſſence of theſe out of the mind. Davies.
For I am a very dead thing,
In whom love wrought new alchymy,
For by his art he did expreſs
A quinteſſence even from nothingneſs,
From dull privations and lean emptineſs. Donne.
Paracelſus, by the help of an intenſe cold, teaches to ſeparate the quinteſſence of wine. Boyle.
Let there be light! ſaid God; and forthwith light
Ethereal, firſt of things, quinteſſence pure,
Sprung from the deep. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. iii.

W

When the ſupreme faculties move regularly, the inferior paſſions and affections following, there ariſes a ſerenity and complacency upon the whole ſoul, infinitely beyond the greateſt bodily pleaſures, the higheſt quinteſſence and elixir of worldly delights. South's Sermons.

QUINTE'SSENTIAL. adj. [from quinteſſence.] Conſiſting of quinteſſence.

Venturous aſſertions as would have puzzled the authors to have made them good, ſpecially conſidering that there is nothing contrary to the quinteſſential matter and circular figure of the heavens; ſo neither is there to the right thereof. Hakew.

QUI'NTIN. n. ſ. [I know not whence derived; Minſheu deduces it from quintus, Lat. and calls it a game celebrated every fifth year, pulus quintanus, Lat. Anſ. quintaine, Fr.] An upright poſt, on the top of which a croſs poſt turned upon a pin, at one end of the croſs poſt was a broad board, and at the other a heavy ſand bag; the play was to ride againſt the broad end with a lance, and paſs by before the ſand bag coming round, ſhould ſtrike the tilter on the back.

At quintin he,
In honour of his bridalkee,
Hath challeng'd either wide countee;
Come cut and long tail, for there be
Six batchelors as bold as he,
Adjuring to his company,
And each one hath his livery. Ben. Jonſon.

RACEMI'FEROUS. adj. [racemus and fero, Latin.] Bearing clusters.

RA'CER

RA'CER. n. f. [from race.] Runner; one that contends in ſpeed.

His ſtumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other pegaſus can fly;
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the ſwift-finn'd racers of the flood. Denham.

A poet's form ſhe plac'd before their eyes,
And bade the nimbleſt racer ſeize the prize. Pope.

RA'CINESS. n. ſ. [from racy.] The quality of being racy.

RACK. n. ſ. [racke, Dutch, from racken, to ſtretch.]

1. An engine to torture.

Vex not his ghoſt; O let him paſs! he hates him
That would, upon the rack of this rough world, Stretch him out longer. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Did ever any man upon the rack afflict himſelf, becauſe he had received a croſs anſwer from his miſtreſs. Taylor.

Let them feel the whip, the ſword, the fire,
And in the tortures of the rack expire. Addiſon.

2. Torture; extreme pain.

A fit of the ſtone puts a king to the rack, and makes him as miſerable as it does the meaneſt ſubject. Temple.

A cool behaviour ſets him on the rack, and is interpreted as an inſtance of averſion or indifference. Addiſon.

3. Any inſtrument by which extenſion is performed.

Theſe bows, being ſomewhat like the long bows in uſe amongſt us, were be it only by a man's immediate ſtrength, without the help of any bender or rack that are uſed to others. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

4. A diſtaff, commonly a portable diſtaff, from which they ſpin by twirling a ball.

The ſiſters turn the wheel,
Empty the woolly rack, and fill the reel. Dryden.

5. [Racke, Dutch, a track.] The clouds as they are driven by the wind.

That, which is now a horſe, even with a thought
The rack diſlimns, and makes it indiſtinct
As water is in water. Shakeſp. Antony and Cleopatra.

The great globe itſelf,
Yea, all, which it inherit, ſhall diſſolve,
And, like this inſubſtantial pageant, faded,
Leave not a rack behind. Shakeſp. Tempeſt.

We often ſee againſt ſome ſtorm,
A ſilence in the heav'ns, the rack ſtand ſtill,
The bold winds ſpeechleſs, and the orb below
As huſh as death. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

The winds in the upper region, which move the clouds above, which we call the rack, and are not perceived below, paſs without noiſe. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.

As wint'ry winds contending in the ſky,
With equal force of lungs their tides try,
They rage, they roar: the doubtful rack of heav'n
Stands without motion, and the toſs undriven. Dryden.

6. [Bracca, the breech, Saxon; racon, Iſland ock, hinges or joints.] A neck of mutton cut for the table.

7. A grate.

8. A wooden grate on which hay is placed for cattle.

Their bulls they ſend to paſtures far,
Or hills, or ſeed them at full racks within. May's Virgil.

The beſt way to feed cattle with it, is to put it in racks, becauſe of the great quantity they tread down. Mortimer.

Let bold the nimble hours
Bring forth the ſteeds, the nimbler hours obey
From their full racks the gen'rous fleeces retire. Addiſon.

9. Arrack, a ſpirituous liquor. See ARRACK.

To RACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To ſtream as clouds before the wind.

Three glorious ſuns, each one a perfect ſun,
Not ſeparated with the racking clouds,
But ſever'd in a pale clear ſhining ſky. Shakeſp.

To RACK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To torment by the rack.

Hold, O dreadful Sir,
You will not rack an innocent old man. Dryden and Lee.

2. To torment; to harraſs.

Th' apoſtate angel, though in pain,
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep deſpair. Milton.

3. To harraſs by exaction.

The landlords there ſhamefully rack their tenants, exacting of them, beſides their covenants, what he pleaſeth. Spenſer.

The commons haſt thou rack'd, the clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions. Shakeſp.

He took poſſeſſion of his juſt eſtate,
Nor rack'd his tenants with increaſe of rent. Dryden.

4. To ſcrew; to force to performance.

They racking and ſtretching ſcripture farther than by God was meant, are drawn into ſundry inconveniencies. Hooker.

The wiſeſt among the heathens racked their wits, and caſt about every way, managing every little argument to the utmoſt advantage. Tillotſon's Sermons.

5. To ſtretch, to extend.

Nor have I money nor commodity
To raiſe a preſent ſum,
Try what my credit can in Venice do,
That ſhall be rack'd even to the uttermoſt. Shakeſp.

6. To defecate; to draw off from the lees. I know not whence this word is derived in this ſenſe; rein, German, is clear, pure, whence our word to rinſe; this is perhaps of the ſame race.

It is common to draw wine or beer from the lees, which we call racking, whereby it will clarify much the ſooner.

Some roll their caſk about the cellar to mix it with the lees, and, after a few days ſettlement, rack it off. Ayl.

RACK-RENT. n. ſ. [rack and rent.] Rent raiſed to the utmoſt.

Have poor families been ruined by rack-rents, paid for the lands of the church? Swift's Miſcellanies.

RACK-RENTER. n. ſ. [rack and renter.] One who pays the utmoſt rent.

Though this be a quarter of his yearly income, and the publick tax takes away one hundred, yet this influences not the yearly rent of the land, which the rack-renter or undertenant pays. Locke.

RACKET. n. ſ. [of uncertain derivation; M. Caſaubon derives it, after his cuſtom, from παγὶς, the daſh of fluctuation againſt the ſhore.]

1. An irregular clattering noiſe.

That the tennis court keeper knows better than I, it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keepeſt not racket there. Shakeſp. Henry IV. p. ii.

2. A [illegible] talk, [illegible]

Ambition hath removed her lodging, and lives the next door to faction, where they keep ſuch a racket, that the whole pariſh is diſturbed and every night in an uproar. Swift.

3. [Raquette, Fr.] The inſtrument with which players ſtrike the ball. Whence perhaps all the other ſenſes.

When we have matcht our rackets to theſe balls,
We will in France play a ſet,
Shall ſtrike his father's crown into the hazard. Shakeſp.

The body, into which impreſſion is made, either can yield backward or it cannot. If it can yield backward, then the impreſſion made is a motion; as we ſee a ſtroke with a racket upon a ball, makes it fly from it. Digby on the Soul.

He talks much of the motives to do and forbear, how they determine a reaſonable man, as if he were no more than a [illegible] ball, to be toſſed to and fro by the rackets of the ſecond. Bramhall againſt Hobbs.

RA[illegible] n. ſ.

[illegible]ing pace of a horſe is the ſame as an amble, only that it is a ſwifter time and a ſhorter tread; and though it does not rid ſo much ground, yet it is ſomething eaſier. Far. Dict.

R[illegible]

The raccoon is a New England animal, like a badger, having a tail like a fox, being cloathed with a thick and deep fur. It ſleeps in the day time in a hollow tree, and goes out [illegible]bits, when the moon ſhines, to feed on the ſea ſide, where it is hunted by dogs. Bailey.

RA'CY. adj. [perhaps from raya, Spaniſh, a root.] Strong; flavorous, taſting of the ſoil.

Th' illumin'd mountain. Thomſon's Spring.

R ..IANT. adj [radians, Lat.] Shining, brightly sparkling; emitting rays

There was a fon of gold radiant upon the top, and before, a fmall cherub of gold with wings difplayed. Bacon

Mark what radiant ftate fhe fpreads,
In circle round her fhining throne,
Shooting her beams like filver threads,
This, this is fhe alone. Milton's Arcades.

Virtue could fee to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though fun and moon
Were in the flat fea funk Milton.

I fee the warlike hoft of heaven,
Radiant in glitt'ring arms and beamy pride,
Go forth to fuccour truth below Milton.

To RA'DIATE. v. n. [radio, Lat.] To emit rays; to fhine; to fparkle.

Though with wit and parts their poffeffors could never engage God to fend forth his light and his truth, yet now that revelation hath difclofed them, and that he hath been pleafed to make them radiate in his word, men may recollect thofe fcattered divine beams, and kindling with them the topicks proper to warm our affections, enflame holy zeal. Boyle.

Light radiates from luminous bodies directly to our eyes, and thus we fee the fun or a flame; or it is reflected from other bodies, and thus we fee a man or a picture. Locke.

RA'DIATED. adj. [radiatus, Lat.] Adorned with rays.

The radiated head of the phœnix gives us the meaning of a paffage in Auſonius. Addifon.

RADIA'TION. n. f. [radiatio, Lat. radiation, Fr.]

Reason n. ſ. [raiſon, Fr. ratio, Lat.]

1. [illegible] other, or proceeds from premiſes to conſequence, the rational faculty.

Reaſon is the director of man's will, diſcovering [illegible] what is good; for the laws of well-doing are the dictates of right reaſon. Hooker, b. [illegible]

Though brutiſh that conteſt and foul,
When reaſon hath to deal with force; yet ſo
Moſt reaſon is that reaſon overcome. Milton.

Dim, as the borrow'd beams of moon and ſtars
To lonely, weary, wand'ring travellers,
Is reaſon to the ſoul: and as on high,
Thoſe rowling fires diſcover but the ſky,
Not light us here; ſo reaſon's glimmering ray
Was lent, not to aſſure our doubtful way,
But guide us upward to a better day. Dryden.

It would be well, if people would not lay ſo much weight on their own reaſon in matters of religion, as to think every thing impoſſible and abſurd, which they cannot conceive: how often do we contradict the right rules of reaſon in the whole courſe of our lives? reaſon itſelf is true and juſt, but the reaſon of every particular man is weak and wavering, perpetually ſwayed and turned by his intereſts, his paſſions and his vices. Swift's Miſcellanies.

2. Cauſe, ground or principle.

Virtue and vice are not arbitrary things, but there is a natural and eternal reaſon for that goodneſs and virtue, and againſt vice and wickedneſs. Tillotſon.

The idea of solidity we receive by our touch. Locke.

The same inability will every one find, who shall go about to fashion in his understanding any simple idea, not received in by his senses or by reflection. Locke.

To conceive the ideas we receive from sensation, consider them, in reference to the different ways, whereby they make their approaches to our minds. Locke.

4. To embrace intellectually.

We have set it down as a law, to examine things to the bottom, and not to receive upon credit, or reject upon improbabilities. Bacon's Natural History.

In an equal indifferency for all truth; I mean the receiving it, in the love of it, as truth; and in the examination of our principles, and not receiving any for such, till we are fully convinced of their certainty, consists the freedom of the understanding. Locke.

5. To allow.

Long received custom forbidding them to do as they did, there was no excuse to justify their act; unless, in the scripture, they could shew some law, that did licence them thus to break a received custom. Hooker, b. ii. f. 5.

Will it not be receiv'd,
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two,
And us'd their very daggers; that they have done't?
—Who dares receive it other? Shakesp. Macbeth.

Lest any should think that any thing in this number eight creates the disdain; this computation of eight is rather a thing received, than any true computation. Bacon.

6. To admit.

When they came to Jerusalem, they were received of the church. Acts xv. 4.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory. Psalm lxxiii. 24.

RECEI'VER. n. f. [receveur, Fr from receive.]

1. One to whom any thing is communicated by another.

All the learnings that his time could make him receiver of, he took as we do air. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

She from whose influence all impression came,
But by receivers impotences came. Donne.

2. One to whom any thing is given or paid

There is a receiver, who alone handleth the monies. Bac.

In all works of liberality, something more is to be considered, besides the occasion of the givers; and that is the occasion of the receivers Sprat.

Gratitude is a virtue, disposing the mind to an inward sense, and an outward acknowledgement of a benefit received, together with a readiness to return the same, as the occasions of the doer shall require, and the abilities of the receiver extend to. South.

If one third of the money in trade were locked up, landholders must receive one third less for their goods; a less quantity of money by one third being to be distributed amongst an equal number of receivers. Locke.

Wood's halfpence will be offered for six a penny, and the necessary receivers will be losers of two thirds in their pay &c.

3. One who partakes of the blessed sacrament.

The signification and sense of the sacrament dispose the spirit of the receiver to admit the grace of the spirit of God there consigned. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

4. One who cooperates with a robber, by taking the goods which he steals.

This is a great cause of the maintenance of thieves, knowing their receivers always ready; for were there no receivers, there would be no thieves. Spenser's State of Ireland.

5. The vessel into which spirits are emitted from the still.

These liquors, which the wide receiver fill,
Prepar'd with labour, and refin'd with skill,
Another course to distant parts begin. Blackmore.

Alkaline spirits run in veins down the sides of the receiver in distillations, which will not take fire. Arbuthnot.

6. The vessel of the air pump, out of which the air is drawn, and which therefore receives any body on which experiments are tried.

The air that in exhausted receivers of air pumps is exhaled from minerals, is as true as to elasticity and density or rarefaction, as that we respire in. Bentley.

To RECELE'BRATE. v. a. [re and celebrate.] To celebrate anew.

French air and English verse here wedded be;
Who did this knot compose,
Again hath brought the lily to the rose;
And with their chained dance,

RE'CENT. adj. [recens, Latin.]

1. New; not of long existence.

The ancients were of opinion, that those parts, where Egypt now is, were formerly sea, and that a considerable portion of that country was recent, and formed out of the mud discharged into the neighbouring sea by the Nile. Woodward.

2. Late; not antique.

Among all the great and worthy persons, whereof the memory remaineth, either ancient or recent, there is not one that hath been transported to the mad degree of love. Bacon.

3. Fresh; not long distilled from.

Ulysses moves,
Void of by want, and recent from the storms,
The brackish ooze his manly grace deforms. Pope.

RE'CENTLY. adv. [from recent.] Newly; freshly.

Those tubes, which are most recently made of fluids, are most flexible and most easily lengthened. Arbuthnot.

RE'CENTNESS. n. s. [from recent.] Newness; freshness.

This inference of the recentness of mankind from the recentness of these apotheoses of gentile deities, seems too weak to bear up this supposition of the novitas humani generis. Hale.

RECE'PTACLE. n. s. [receptaculum, Lat.] A vessel or place into which any thing is received.

When the sharpness of death was overcome, he then opened heaven, as well to believing gentiles as Jews: heaven and then was no receptacle to the souls of either. Hooker.

The county of Tipperary, the only county palatine in Ireland, is by abuse of some bad ones made a receptacle to rob the rest of the counties about it. Spenser's State of Ireland.

As in a vault, an ancient receptacle,
Where for these many hundred years, the bones
Of all my buried ancestors are packt. Shakesp.

The eye of the soul, or receptacle of sapience and divine knowledge. Raleigh's History of the World.

2. The state of being received.

3. Admission of any thing communicated.

Causes, according full
To the reception of their matter, act;
Not to th' extent of their own sphere. Milton's Par. Lost.

In some animals, the avenues, provided by nature for the reception of sensations, are few, and the perception, they are received with, obscure and dull. Locke.

4. Readmission.

All hope is lost
Of my reception into grace. Milton's Par. Lost.

5. The act of containing.

I cannot survey this word of fluid matter, without thinking on the hand that first poured it out, and made a proper channel for its reception. Addison.

6. Treatment at first coming; welcome; entertainment.

This succession of so many powerful methods being further prescribed by God, have found so discouraging a reception, that nothing but the violence of storming or battery can pretend to prove successful. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Pretending to consult
About the great reception of their king,
Thither to come. Milton.

7. Opinion generally admitted.

Philosophers, who have quitted the popular doctrines of their countries, have fallen into as extravagant opinions, as even common reception countenanced. Locke.

8. Recovery.

He was right glad of the French king's reception of those towns from Maximilian. Bacon's Henry VII.

RE'CEPTIVE. adj. [receptus, Lat.] Having the quality of admitting what is communicated.

The soul being, as it is active, perfected by love of that infinite good, shall, as it is receptive, be also perfected with those supernatural passions of joy, peace and delight. Hooker.

The pretended first matter is capable of all forms, and the imaginary space is receptive of all bodies. Glanvill.

RE'CEPTORY. adj. [receptus, Lat.] Generally or popularly admitted.

Although therein be contained many excellent things, and verified upon his own experience, yet are there many also receptory, and will not endure the test. Brown.

RECE'SS. n. s. [recessus, Latin.]

1. Retirement; retreat; withdrawing; secession.

What tumults could not do, an army must; my recess hath given them confidence that I may be conquered. K. Charles.

Fair Thames she haunts, and every neighb'ring grove,
Sacred to soft recess and gentle love. Prior.

2. Departure.

We come into the world, and know not how; we live in it in a self-nescience, and go hence again, and are as ignorant of our recess. Glanvill's Scepsis.

3. Place of retirement; place of secrecy; private abode.

This happy place, our sweet

The deep recesses of the grove he gain'd. Dryden.

RECIDIVA'TION. n. f. [recidivus, Lat.] Backsliding; falling again.

Our renewed obedience is still most indispensably required, though mixed with much of weakness, frailties, recidivations, to make us capable of pardon. Hammond's Pract. Cat.

RECI'DIVOUS. adj. [recidivus, Lat.] Subject to fall again.

RE'CIPE. n. f. [recipe, Lat. the term used by physicians, when they direct ingredients.] A medical prescription.

I should enjoin you travel, for absence doth in a kind remove the cause, and answers the physicians first recipe, vomiting and purging, but this would be too harsh. Suckling.

Th' apothecary train is wholly hired,
From files a random recipe they take,
And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryden.

RE[illegible], I[illegible]

1. The receiver; that to which any thing is communicated.

Though the images, or whatever else is the cause of sense, may be alike as from the object, yet may the representations be varied according to the nature of the recipient. Glanvill.

2. [Recipient, Fr.] The vessel into which spirits are driven by the still.

The form of sound words, dissolved by chymical preparation, ceases to be nutritive; and after all the labours of the alembeck, leaves in the recipient a fretting corrosive. D. of Pis.

RECIPROCAL. adj. [reciprocus, Lat. reciproque, Fr.]

1. Acting in vicissitude; alternate.

Corruption is reciprocal to generation; and they two are as nature's two boundaries, and guides to life and death. Bacon.

What if that light,
To the terrestrial moon be as a star,
Enlight'ning her by day, as she by night,
This earth? reciprocal, if land be there,
Fields and inhabitants. Milton.

2. Mutual; done by each to each.

Where there's no hope of a reciprocal aid, there can be no reason for the mutual obligation. L'Estrange.

In reciprocal duties, the failure on one side justifies not a failure on the other. Clarissa.

3. Mutually interchangeable.

These two rules will render a definition reciprocal with the thing defined, which, in the schools, signifies, that the definition may be used in the place of the thing defined. Watts.

4. In geometry, reciprocal proportion is, when, in four numbers, the fourth number is so much lesser than the second, as the third is greater than the first, and vice versa. Harris.

According to the laws of motion, if the bulk and activity of aliment and medicines are in reciprocal proportion, the effect will be the same. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

RECI'PROCALLY. adv. [from reciprocal.] Mutually; interchangeably.

Its mind and place
Infecting one another reciprocally. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Make the bodies appear enlightened by the shadows which bound the light, which cause it to repose for some space of time; and reciprocally the shadows may be made sensible by enlightening your ground. Dryden.

If the distance be about the hundredth part of an inch, the water will rise to the height of about an inch, and if the distance be greater or less in any proportion, the height will be reciprocally proportional to the distance very nearly: for the attractive force of the glasses is the same, whether the distance between them be greater or less, and the weight of the water drawn up is the same, if the height of it be reciprocally proportional to the height of the glasses. Newton's Opticks.

Those two particles do reciprocally affect each other with the same force and vigour, as they would do at the same distance in any other situation. Bentley.

RECI'PROCALNESS. n. f. [from reciprocal.] Mutual return; [illegible]

The reciprocalness of the injury ought to allay the displeasure at it. Decay of Piety.

That with fond terms and witless words,
To bleer mine eyes dost think. Spenser.

Good or bad,
What do I reck, sith that he dy'd entire. Fairy Queen.

I reck as little what betideth me,
As much I wish all good befortune you. Shakesp.

[illegible] or [illegible] me not,
I fear the dread events that dog them both,
Lest some ill greeting touch attempt the person
Of our unowned sister. Milton.

With that care lost
Went all his fear; of God, or hell or worse
He reck'd not. Milton.

To RECK. v. a. To heed; to care for.

This son of mine, not recking danger, and neglecting the present good way he was in of doing himself good, came hither to do this kind office to my unspeakable grief. Sidney.

If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing,
That none but fools would reck. Shakesp.

Do not you as ungracious parsons do,
Who shew the steep and thorny way to heav'n,
Yet like unthinking reckless libertines,
That in the soft path of dalliance treads,
Recks not his own rede. Shakesp.

RE'CKLESS. adj. [from reck; peccelear, Saxon.] Careless; heedless; regardless; untouched. See RECK.

As they have been the great refiners of our language, ſo hath been my chief ambition to imitate them. Sw. ft

3. Inventor of ſuperfluous ſubtilties.

No men ſee leſs of the truth of things, than theſe great refiners upon incidents, who are ſo wonderfully ſubtle, and over wiſe in their conceptions. Addiſon's Spectator, N° 170.

Some refiners pretend to argue for the ſtateſmen of parties ſuch a government as ours. Swift

To REFI'T. v. a [refit, Fr. re and fit.] To repair, to reſtore after damage

He will not allow that there are any ſuch ſigns of art in the make of the preſent globe, or that there was ſo great care taken in the refitting of it up again at the deluge. Woodw.

Permit our ſhips a ſhelter on your ſhores,
Refitted from your woods with planks and oars. Dryd.

To REFLE'CT, v. a. [reflecter, Fr. reflecto, Lat.] To throw back

We, his gather'd beams
Reflected, may with matter ſere foment. Milton.

Bodies cloſe together reflect their own colour. Dryden.

To REFLE'CT v. n

1. To throw back light.

In dead men's ſculls, and in thoſe holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in ſcorn of eyes, reflecting gems. Shakeſp.

2. To bend back.

Inanimate matter moves always in a ſtraight line, and never reflects in an angle, nor bends in a circle, which is a continual reflection, unleſs either by ſome external impulſe, or by an intrinſick principle of gravity. Bentley's Sermons.

3. To throw back the thoughts upon the paſt or on themſelves.

The imagination calls thoughts in our way, and forces the underſtanding to reflect upon them. Duppa.

In every action reflect upon the end, and in your undertaking it, conſider why you do it. Taylor

Who ſaith, who could ſuch ill events expect?
With ſhame on his own counſels doth reflect. Denham.

When men are grown up, and reflect on their own minds, they cannot find any thing more ancient there, than thoſe opinions which were taught them before their memory began to keep a regiſter of their actions. Locke.

It is hard, that any part of my land ſhould be ſettled upon one who has uſed me ſo ill, and yet I could not ſee a ſprig of any bough of this whole walk of trees, but I ſhould reflect upon her and her ſeverity. Addiſon's Spectator.

Let the king diſmiſs his woes,
Reflecting on her fair renown,
And take the cypreſs from his brows,
To put his wonted laurels on. Prior.

4. To conſider attentively.

Into myſelf my reaſon's eye I turn'd;
And as I much reflected, much I mourn'd Prior.

[illegible]

Errors of wives reflect on huſbands ſhame. Dryden.

REFLE'CTENT. adj. [reflectens, Lat.] Bending back; flying back

The ray deſcendent, and the ray reflectent, flying with ſo great a ſpeed, that the air between them cannot take a formal play any way, before the beams of the light be on both ſides of it; it follows, that, according to the nature of humid [illegible]

REFLE'CTION. n. ſ. [from reflect. thence I think reflexion is a [illegible]

1. The act of throwing back.

The eye ſees not itſelf,
But by reflection from other things Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar.

If the ſun's light conſiſted but of one ſort of rays, there would be but one colour, and it would be impoſſible to produce any new by reflections or refractions. Cheyne

2. [illegible]

Inanimate matter moves always in a ſtraight line, nor ever reflects in an angle or circle, which is a continual reflection, unleſs by ſome external impulſe. Bentley's Sermons.

3. That which is reflected

She ſhines not upon fools, leſt the reflection ſhould hurt her Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

As the ſun in water we can bear,
Yet not the ſun, but his reflection there;
So let us view her here, in what ſhe was,
And take her image in this watry glaſs. Dryden.

4. Thought thrown back upon the paſt.

The three firſt parts I dedicate to my old friends, to take off thoſe melancholy reflections, which the ſenſe of age, infirmity and death may give them. Denham.

This dreadful image ſo poſſeſs'd her mind,
She ceas'd all farther hope, and now beg
To make reflection on th' unhappy man. [illegible]

Job's

What wounding reproaches of soul must he feel, from the reflections on his own ingratitude. Regers's Sermons.

The act or the mind upon itself

Reflection is the perception of the operations of our own minds within us, as it is employed about the ideas it has got Locke.

Attentive consideration.

This delight grows and improves under thought and reflection, and while it exercises, does also endear itself to the mind, at the same time employing and inflaming the meditations. South's Sermons

He cry'd, and oh! may no reflection shed
Its poisonous venom on the royal dead.

REFLE'CTANT. adj. [from reflect] Throwing back images.

When the weary King gave place to night,
His beams he to his royal brother lent,
And so the moon full in his reflective light Dryden.
In the reflective stream the fig
Viewing her charms in pairs, abash'd shall hide
Her guilty head. Prior.

2 Considering things past, considering the operations of the mind

Pierc'd by reflective reason I confess,
That human science is uncertain guess. Prior.

REFLE'CTOR. n. s. [from reflect] Considerer.

There is scarce any thing that nature has made, or that men do suffer, whence the devout reflector can not take an occasion of an admiring meditation. Boyle on Colours

REFLE'X. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Directed backward

The motions of my mind are as obvious to the reflex act of the mind, or the turning of the intellectual eye inward upon its own actions, as the passions of my sense are obvious to my [illegible] see the object, and I perceive that I see it. Hale.

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, [illegible] ble ends of them do evince by a reflex argument, that it is the work manship, not of blind mechanism or blinder chance, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.

REFLE'X. n. s. [reflexus, Lat.] Reflection.

There was no other way for angels to sin, but by reflex of their understandings upon their eyes. Hooker.

[illegible] say you gray is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shakesp.

REFLEXIBILITY. n. s. [from reflexive.] The quality of being reflexible

Reflexibility of rays is their disposition to be reflected or turned back into the same medium from any other medium, upon whose surface they fall; and rays are more or less reflexible, which are turned back more or less easily Newton.

adj. [from reflexus, Lat.] Capable to be thrown back

That Newton has demonstrated, by convincing experiments, that the light of the sun consists of rays differently refrangible and reflexible; and that those rays are differently reflexible, that are differently refrangible. Cheyne

REFLE'XIVE. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Having respect to something past

That assurance reflexive cannot be a divine faith, but at the most an human, yet such as perhaps I may have no doubting mixed with Hammond's Practical Catechism.

REFLE'XIVELY. adv. [from reflexive] In a backward direction.

Solomon tells us life and death are in the power of the [illegible] and that not only directly in regard of the good [illegible] do to others, but reflexively also, in respect of what may redound to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

To REFO'RM. v. a. [reformo, Lat. reformer, Fr.] To change from worse to better.

A sect in England, following the very same rule of piety, seeketh to reform even the French reformation, and purge out from thence also dregs of popery

Seat worthier of Gods, was built
[illegible]
May no such storm
Fall on our times, where ruin must reform. Denham.

Now low'ring looks pretage approaching storms,
And now prevailing love her face reforms Dryden.

One cannot attempt the perfect reforming the languages of the world, without renouncing himself ridiculous. Locke.

The example alone of a vicious prince will corrupt an age, but that of a good one will not reform it. Sw.

To REFO'RM. v. n. To make a change from worse to better

Was his doctrine of the mass struck out in the council? or did it give him occasion of reforming in this

REFO'RM. n. s. [French.] Reformation.

REFORMA'TION. n. s. [reformation, Fr. from reform.]

1. Change from worse to better

Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scowring faults;
Nor ever Hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, as in this king Shakesp. Henry V.

Nature labes vice [illegible] reformation. Dryden

The pagan converts mention this great reformation of those who had been the greatest sinners, with that sadden and surprising change, which the christian religion made in their lives [illegible] the most profligate. Addison.

2. The change of religion from the corruptions of popery to its primitive state

The burden of the reformation lay on Luther's shoulders.

REFO'RMER. n. s. [from reform.]

1. One who makes a change for the better; an amender

Publick reformers had need first practise that on their own hearts, which they purpose to try on others. King Charles.

The complaint is more general, than the endeavours to redress it. Abroad every man would be a reformer, how very few at home. Sprat's Sermons

It was honour enough, to behold the English churches reformed, that is, delivered from the reformers South

2. Those who changed religion from popish corruptions and innovations.

Our first reformers were famous confessors and martyrs all over the world. Bacon.

To REFRA'CT. v. a. [refractus, Lat.] To break the natural course of rays.

If its angle of incidence be large, and the refractive power of the medium not very strong to throw it far from the perpendicular, it will be refracted. Cowley's Pin. Prop.

The grand ethereal now shoots up. Thomson.

[illegible]

Refraction, in general, is the incurvation or change of determination in the body moved, which happens to it when it enters or penetrates any medium: in dioptricks, it is the variation of a ray of light from that right line, which it would have passed on in, had not the density of the medium turned it aside. Harris.

Refraction, out of the rarer medium into the denser, is made towards the perpendicular Newton's Opticks.

REFRA'CTIVE. adj. [from refract] Having the power of refraction

Those superficies of transparent bodies reflect the greatest quantity of light, which have the greatest refracting power that is, which intercede mediums that differ most in their

REFRACTORINESS. n. s. [from refractory.] Sullen obstinacy

I did never allow any man's refractoriness against the privileges and orders of the houses. King Charles.

Great complaint was made by the presbyterian party of my refractoriness to obey the parliament's order Saunderson.

REFRACTORY. adj. [refractaire, Fr. refractarius, Lat. and so should be written refractary. It is now accented on the first syllable, but by Shakespeare on the second.] Obstinate,

There is a law in each well-order'd nation,
To curb those raging appetites that are

A rough hewn seaman, being brought before a wise justice for some misdemeanor, was by him ordered to be sent away to prison, and was refractory after he heard his doom, insomuch as he would not stir a foot from the place where he stood, saying, it was better to stand where he was, than go to a worse place. Bacon's Apothegms.

Vulgar compliance with any illegal and extravagant will like violent motions in nature, soon grows weary of itself, and ends in a refractory sullenness. King Charles.

Refractory mortal! if thou will not truſt thy friends, take what follows; know aſſuredly, before next full moon, that thou wilt be hung up in chains. Arbuthnot's Hiſt. of J. Bull.

Theſe atoms of theirs may have it in them, but they are refractory and ſullen; and therefore, like men of the ſame tempers, muſt be banged and buffeted into reaſon. Bentley.

RE'FRAGABLE. adj. [refragabilis, Lat.] Capable of confutation and conviction.

To REFRAI'N. v. a. [refrener, Fr. re and frenum, Lat.] To hold back, to keep from action.

Hold not thy tongue, O God, keep not ſtill ſilence: from not thyſelf. Pſalm lxxxiii. 1.

My ſon, walk not thou in the way with them, refrain thy foot from their path. Prov. i. 15.

Nor from the holy one of heav'n
Refrain'd his tongue. Milton.

Neptune aton'd, his wrath ſhall now refrain,
Or thwart the ſynod of the gods in vain. Pope.

To REFRAI'N. v. n. To forbear, to abſtain; to ſpare.

In what place, or upon what conſideration ſoever it be, they do it, were it in their own opinion of no force being done, they would undoubtedly refrain to do it. Hooker.

For my name's ſake will I defer mine anger, and refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off. Iſ. xlviii. 9.

That they fed not on fleſh, at leaſt the faithful party before the flood, may become more probable, becauſe they refrained therefrom ſome time after. Brown's Vulg. Err.

REFRANGIBI'LITY. n. ſ. [from refrangible.]

A ſuperadded property of the rays of light, is their diſpoſition to be refracted or turned out of their way, in paſſing out of one tranſparent body or medium into another. Newton.

REFRA'NGIBLE. adj. [re and frango, Lat.]

As ſome rays are more refrangible than others; that is, are more turned out of their courſe, in paſſing from one medium to another, it follows, that after ſuch refraction, they will be ſeparated, and their diſtinct colour obſerved. Locke.

REFRENA'TION. n. ſ. [re and frenum, Lat.] The act of reſtraining.

To REFRE'SH. v. a. [rafraiſchir, Fr. refrigero, Lat.]

To RESEA'RCH. v. a. [rechercher, Fr.] To examine; to enquire.

It is not easy to research with due distinction, in the actions of eminent personages, both how much may have been blemished by the envy of others, and what was corrupted by their own felicity. Wotton's Buckingham.

To RESEA'T. v. a. [re and seat.] To seat again.

When he's produc'd, will you reseat him
Upon his father's throne? Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

RESEI'ZER. n. f. One that seizes again.

RESEI'ZURE. n. f. [re and seizure.] Repeated seizure; seizure a second time.

Here we have the charter of foundation; it is now the more easy to judge of the forfeiture or reseizure: deface the image, and you divest the right. Bacon.

RESEMBLANCE. n. f. [resemblance, Fr.] Likeness; similitude; representation.

These sensible things, which religion hath allowed, are resemblances formed according to things spiritual, whereunto they serve as a hand to lead, and a way to direct. Hooker.

Fairest resemblance of thy maker fair,
Thee all things living gaze on. Milton.

One main end of poetry and painting is to please, they bear a great resemblance to each other. Dryden's Dufresn.

The quality produced hath commonly no resemblance with the thing producing it; wherefore, we look on it as a bare effect of power. Locke.

They are but weak resemblances of our intentions, faint and imperfect copies that may acquaint us with the general design, but can never express the life of the original. Addison.

So chymists boast they have a pow'r,
From the dead ashes of a flow'r,
Some faint resemblance to produce,
But not the virtue. Swift's Miscellanies.

I cannot help remarking the resemblance betwixt him and our author in qualities, fame, and fortune. Pope.

To RESEMBLE. v. a. [ressembler, Fr.]

1. To compare; to represent as like something else.

Most safely may we resemble ourselves to God, in respect that pure faculty, which is never separate from the love of God. Raleigh's History of the World.

The torrid parts of Africk are resembled to a leopard's skin, the distance of whose spots represent the dispersedness of habitations. Brerewood on Language.

2. To

2. To be like; to have likeness to.

If we see a man of virtues, mixed with infirmities, fall into misfortune, we are afraid that the like misfortunes may happen to ourselves, who resemble the character. Addison.

To RESEND. v. a. [re and send.] To send back; to send again. Not in use.

I sent to her, by this same coxcomb,
Tokens and letters, which she did resend. Shakesp.

To RESENT. v. a. [ressentir, Fr.]

1. To take well or ill.

A serious consideration of the mineral treasures of his territories, and the practical discoveries of them by way of my philosophical theory, he then so well resented, that afterwards, upon a mature digestion of my whole design, he commanded me to let your lordships understand, how great an inclination he hath to farther so hopeful a work. Bacon.

2. To take ill; to consider as an injury or affront. This is now the most usual sense.

I hou with scorn
And anger would'st resent the offer'd wrong. Milton.

RESENTER n. s. [from resent.] One who feels injuries deeply.

The earl was the worst philosopher, being a great resenter, and a weak dissembler of the least disgrace. Wotton.

RESENTFUL. adj. [resent and full.] Malignant; easily provoked to anger, and long retaining it.

RESENTINGLY. adv. [from resenting.] With deep sense; with strong perception; with anger.

RESENTMENT. n. s. [ressentiment, Fr.]

1. Strong perception of good or ill.

He retains vivid resentments of the more solid morality. More's Divine Dialogues.

Some faces we admire and dote on; others, in our impartial apprehensions, no less deserving, we can behold without resentment; yea, with an invincible disregard. Glanvill.

What he hath of sensible evidence, the very grand work of his demonstration, is but the knowledge of his own resentment; but how the same things appear to others, they only know that are conscious to them; and how they are in themselves, only he that made them. Glanvill's Scepsis.

2. Deep sense of injury.

Can heavy minds such high resentment show,
Or exercise their spight in human woe? Dryden.

I cannot, without some envy, and a just resentment against the opposite conduct of others, reflect upon that generosity, wherewith the heads of a struggling faction treat those who will undertake to hold a pen in their defence. Swift.

RESERVATION. n. s. [reservation, Fr.]

1. Reserve; concealment of something in the mind.

Nor had I any reservations in my own soul, when I passed that bill, nor repentings after. King Charles.

We swear with Jesuitical equivocations and mental reservations. Sanderson against the Covenant.

2. Something kept back; something not given up.

Ourself by monthly course,
With reservation of an hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Shakesp. King Lear.

This is academical reservation in matters of easy truth, or rather sceptical infidelity against the evidence of reason. Bro.

Those opinions Steele and his faction are endeavouring to propagate among the people concerning the present ministry, with what reservation to the honour of the queen, I cannot determine. Swift's Miscellanies.

3. Custody; state of being treasured up.

He will'd me,
In heedfull'st reservation, to bestow them
As notes, whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they of note. Shakesp.

RESERVATORY. n. s. [reservoir, Fr.] Place in which any thing is reserved or kept.

How far soever we may be from the financial reservatories as to make a computation of the water now concealed therein, peruse the propositions concerning earthquakes. Woodward.

To RESERVE. v. a. [reserver, Fr. reservo, Lat.]

1. To keep in store; to save to some other purpose.

I could add many probabilities of the names of places; but they should be too long for this, and I reserve them for another. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Hast thou seen the treasures of the hail, which I have reserved against the day of trouble? Job xxxviii. 23.

David houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them for an hundred chariots. 2 Sam. viii. 4.

Flowers
Reserv'd from night, and kept for thee in store. Milton.

2. To retain; to keep; to hold.

Reserve thy state, with better judgment check
This hideous rashness. Shakesp.

Will he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Jer. iii. 5.

3. To lay up to a future time.

The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished. 2 Peter ii. 9.

The breach seems like the fissures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence. Dryden of Fevers.

Conceal your crimes as well as you can from the world, but never reserve your blushes and confusion for the last hours. South.

RESERVE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Store kept untouched.

The assent may be withheld upon this suggestion, that I know not yet all that may be said; and therefore, though I be beaten, it is not necessary I should yield, not knowing what forces there are in reserve behind. Locke.

2. Something kept for exigence.

The virgins, besides the oil in their lamps, carried likewise a reserve in some other vessel for a continual supply. Tillotson.

3. Something concealed in the mind.

However any one may concur in the general scheme, it is full with certain reserves and deviations, and with a salvo to his own private judgement. Addison's Freeholder.

4. Exception, prohibition.

Is knowledge so defpis'd?
Or envy, or what reserve forbids to taste? Milton.

5. Exception in favour.

Each has some darling lust, which pleads for a reserve, and which they would fain reconcile to the expectations of religion. Rogers's Sermons.

6. Modesty; caution in personal behaviour.

Ere guardian thought cou'd bring its scatter'd aid,
My soul surpris'd, and from herself disjoin'd,
Lost all reserve, and all the sex behind. Prior.

RESERVED. adj. [from reserve.]

1. Modest; not loosely free.

To all obliging, yet reserv'd to all,
None could himself the favour'd lover call. Gay.

2. Sullen; not open; not frank.

Nothing reserv'd or sullen was to see,
But sweet regards. Dryden.

RESERVEDLY. adv. [from reserved.]

1. Not with frankness; not with openness; with reserve.

I must give only short hints, and write but obscurely and reservedly, until I have opportunity to express my sentiments with greater copiousness and perspicuity. Woodward.

2. Scrupulously, coldly.

He speaks reserv'dly, but he speaks with force;
Nor can a word be chang'd but for a worse. Pope.

RESERVEDNESS. n. s. [from reserved.] Closeness; want of frankness; want of openness.

Observe their gravity
And their reservedness, their many cautions
Fitting their persons. Benj. Johnson's Catiline.

By formality, I mean something more than ceremony and compliment, even a solemn reservedness, which may well consist with honesty. Wotton.

There was great warmness and reservedness, and so great a jealousy of each other, that they had no mind to give or receive visits. Clarendon, b. vi.

Dissimulation can but just guard a man within the compass of his own personal concerns, which yet may be more effectually done by that silence and reservedness, that every man may innocently practise. South's Sermons.

RESERVER. n. s. [from reserve.] One that reserves.

RESERVOIR. n. s. [reservoir, Fr.] Place where any thing is kept in store.

There is not a spring or fountain, but are well provided with huge cisterns and reservoirs of rain and snow-water. Add.

Who sees pale Mammon pine amidst his store,
Sees but a backward steward for the poor;
This year a reservoir, to keep and spare;
The next, a fountain spouting through his heir. Pope.

To RESETTLE. v. a. [re and settle.] To settle again.

Will the house of Austria yield the least article, even of usurped prerogative, to resettle the minds of those princes in the alliance, who are alarmed at the consequences of the emperor's death. Swift.

RESETTLEMENT. n. s. [from resettle.]

1. The act of settling again.

To the quieting of my passions, and the resettlement of my discomposed soul, I consider that grief is the most absurd of all the passions. Norris's Miscellanies.

2. The state of settling again.

Some roll their cask to mix it with the lees, and, after a resettlement, they rack it. Mortimer's Husbandry.

RESIANCE. n. s. [from resiant.] Residence; abode, dwelling. Resiance and resiant are now only used in law.

And ruled long with honourable ſtate. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

To RESI'GN. v. a. [reſigner, Fr. reſigno, Lat.]

1. To give up a claim or poſſeſſion.

Reſign
Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held. Shakeſp.

I'll to the king, and ſignify to him,
That thus I have reſign'd to you my charge. Shakeſp.

To her thou didſt reſign thy place. Milton.

Phœbus reſigns his darts, and Jove
His thunder, to the god of love. Denham.

Ev'ry Iſmena would reſign her breaſt;
And ev'ry dear Hippolytus be bleſt. Prior.

2. To yield up.

Whoever ſhall reſign their reaſons, either from the root of deceit in themſelves, or inability to reſiſt ſuch trivial inganations from others, although their condition may place them above the multitude, yet are they ſtill within the line of vulgarity. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Deſirous to reſign and render back
All I receiv'd. Milton.

Thoſe, who always reſign their judgment to the laſt man they heard or read, truth never ſinks into thoſe men's minds; but, cameleon-like, they take the colour of what is ſaid before them, and as ſoon loſe and reſign it to the next that comes in their way. Locke.

3. To give up in confidence. With up emphatical.

What more reaſonable, than that we ſhould in all things reſign up ourſelves to the will of God. Tillotſon.

4. To ſubmit; particularly to ſubmit to providence.

Happy the man, who ſtudies nature's laws,
His mind poſſeſſing in a quiet ſtate,
Fearleſs of fortune, and reſign'd to fate: Dryden.

A firm, yet cautious, mind,
Sincere, though prudent; conſtant, yet reſign'd. Pope.

5. To ſubmit without reſiſtance or murmur.

What thou art, reſign to death Shakeſp. Henry VI.

RESIGNA'TION. n. ſ.

2. To not admit impreſſion or force.

Nor keen nor ſolid could reſiſt that edge. Addiſon.

RESI'STANCE. } [reſiſtance, Fr. This word, like many other,
RESISTENCE. } is differently written, as it is ſuppoſed to have come from the Latin or the French.]

1. The act of reſiſting, oppoſition.

Demetrius, ſeeing that the land was quiet, and that no reſiſtance was made againſt him, ſent away all his forces. 1 Mac.

2. The quality of not yielding to force or external impreſſion.

The reſiſtance of bone to cold is greater than of fleſh, for that the fleſh ſhrinketh, but the bone reſiſteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager. Bacon.

Muſick ſo ſoftens and diſarms the mind,
That not an arrow does reſiſtance find. Waller.

The idea of ſolidity we receive by our touch, and it ariſes from the reſiſtance which we find in body to the entrance of any other body into the place it poſſeſſes. Locke.

But that part of the reſiſtance, which ariſes from the vis inertiæ, is proportional to the denſity of the matter, and cannot be diminiſhed by dividing the matter into ſmaller parts, nor by any other means, than by decreaſing the denſity of the medium. Newton's Opticks.

RESISTIBI'LITY. n. ſ. [from reſiſtible.] Quality of reſiſting.

Whether the reſiſtibility of Adam's reaſon did not equivalence the facility of Eve's ſeduction, we refer unto ſchoolmen. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

The name body, being the complex idea of extenſion and reſiſtibility, together, in the ſame ſubject, theſe two ideas are not exactly one and the ſame. Locke.

RESI'STIBLE. adj. [from reſiſt.] That may be reſiſted.

That is irreſiſtible, this, though potent, yet is in its own nature reſiſtible by the will of man; though it many times prevails by its efficacy. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

RESI'STLESS adj. [from reſiſt.] Irreſiſtable, that cannot be oppoſed.

Our own eyes do every where behold the ſudden and reſiſtleſs aſſaults of death. Raleigh's Hiſtory of the World.

All at once to force reſiſtleſs way. Milton.

Since you can love, and yet your error ſee,
The ſame reſiſtleſs power may plead for me. Dryden.

She chang'd her ſtate;
Reſiſtleſs in her love, as in her hate. Dryden.

[illegible]
A ſtronger charm is theſe, a generous heart. Lyric.

RE[illegible]

RESO'LVABLE. adj. [from resolve.]

1. That may be analysed or separated.

Pride is of such intimate connect on w[illegible] structure, that the actions of ingratitude seem directly resolvable into pride, as the principal reason of them South.

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates, so as to turn it horny like parchment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Capable of solution or of being made less obscure.

The effect is wonderful in all, and the causes best resolvable from observations made in the countries themselves, the parts through which they pass. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

RESO'LUBLE. adj. [resoluble, Fr. re and solubilis, Lat.] That may be melted or dissolved.

Three is not precisely the number of the distinct elements, whereunto mixt bodies are resoluble by fire. Boyle

To RESO'LVE v. a. [resolvo, Lat. resoudre, Fr.]

1. To inform, to free from a doubt or difficulty

In all things then are our consciences best resolved, and in most agreeable sort unto God and nature resolved, when they are so far persuaded, as those grounds of persuasion will bear. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

Give me some breath,
Before I positively speak in this
I will resolve your grace immediately. Shakesp. Rich. III.

I cannot brook delay, resolve me now;
And what your pleasure is, shall satisfy me. Shakesp.

Resolve me, strangers, whence and what you are? Dryd.

2. To solve; to clear.

Examine, sift, and resolve their alleged proofs, till you come to the very root whence they spring, and it shall clearly appear, that the most which can be infered upon such plenty of divine testimonies, is only this, that some things, which they maintain, do seem to have been out of scripture not absurdly gathered. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

I resolve the riddle of their loyalty, and give them opportunity to let the world see, they mean not what they do, but what they say. King Charles.

He always bent himself rather judiciously to resolve, than by doubts to perplex a business. Heyward

The gravers, when they have attained to the knowledge of these reposes, will easily resolve those difficulties which perplex them. Dryden's Dufresnoy

The man, who would resolve the work of fate,
May limit number. Prior.

Happiness, it was presently resolved by all, must be some one uniform end, proportioned to the capacities of human nature, attainable by every man, independent on fortune. Rogers's Sermons

3. To settle in an opinion.

Long since we were resolved of your truth,
Your faithful service, and your toil in war. Shakesp.

4. To fix in a determination.

Good proof
This day affords, declaring thee resolv'd
To undergo with me one guilt. Milton.

I run to meet th' alarms,
Resolv'd on death, resolv'd to die in arms. Dryden.

Resolv'd for sea, the slaves thy baggage pack,
Nothing retards thy voyage, unless
Thy other lord forbids voluptuousness. Dryden's Persius.

5. To fix in constancy; to confirm

Quit presently the chapel, or resolve you
For more amazement
I'll make the statue move. Shakesp.

6. To melt, to dissolve.

Resolving is bringing a fluid, which is now concreted, into the state of fluidity again. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Vegetable salts resolve the congulated humours of a human body, and attenuate, by stimulating the solids, and dissolving the fluids. Arbuthnot on Aliments

7. To analyse.

Into what can we resolve this strong inclination of mankind to this error? it is altogether unimaginable, but that the reason of so universal a consent should be constant. Tillotson.

Ye immortal souls, who once were men,
And now resolv'd to elements again. Dryden.

The decrees turn upon this point, and resolve all into a monarchical power at Rome. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

To RESOLVE. v. n

1. To determine; to decree within one's self.

Confirm'd, then I resolve
Adam shall share with me. Milton.

Covetousness is like the sea, that receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in lending any back; therefore those, who have resolved upon the thriving sort of piety, have seldom embarked all their hopes in one bottom. D. of Pi.

2. To melt; to be dissolved.

Have I not hideous death within my view?
Retaining but a quantity of life,
Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax
Resolveth from its figure 'gainst the fire. Shakesp.

No man condemn me, who has never felt
A woman's power, or try'd the force of love;
All tempers yield and soften in those fires,
Our honours, interests, resolving down,
Run in the gentle current of our joys. Southern's Oroonoko.

When the blood stagnates in any part, it first coagulates, then resolves and turns alkaline. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. To be settled in opinion.

Let men resolve of that as they please: this every intelligent being must grant, that there is something that is himself, that he would have happy. Locke.

RESO'LVE. n. s. [from the verb.] Resolution; fixed determination.

I'm glad, you thus continue your resolve,
To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy. Shakesp.

When he sees
Himself by dogs, and dogs by men pursu'd,
He straight revokes his bold resolve, and more
Repents his courage, than his fear before. Denham.

Cæsar's approach has summon'd us together,
And Rome attends her fate from our resolves. Addis. Cato.

RESO'LVEDLY. adv. [from resolved.] With firmness and constancy.

A man may be resolvedly patient unto death; so that it is not the mediocrity of resolution, which makes the virtue, nor the extremity, which makes the vice. Crew's Cosmol.

RESO'LVEDNESS. n. s. [from resolved.] Resolution; constancy; firmness.

This resolvedness, this high fortitude in sin, can with no reason be imagined a preparative to its remission. D. of Piety.

RESO'LVENT. n. s. [resolvens, Latin.] That which has the power of causing solution.

In the beginning of inflammation, they require repellents; and in the increase, somewhat of resolvents ought to be mixed. Wiseman's Surgery.

Lactescent plants, as lettuce and endive, contain a most wholesome juice, resolvent of the bile, anodyne and cooling. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

RE[illegible] [from resolve.]

1. One that forms a firm resolution.

Thy resolutions were not before sincere; consequently God that saw that, cannot be thought to have justified that unsincere resolver, that dead faith. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

2. One that dissolves; one that separates parts.

It may be doubted, whether or no the fire be the genuine and universal resolver of mixed bodies. Boyle.

RE'SOLUTE. adj. [resolu, Fr.] Determined; fixed; constant; steady, firm.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
The pow'r of man; for none of woman born
Shall harm Macbeth. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Edward is at hand
Ready to fight; therefore be resolute. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

RE[illegible] [from resolute] Determinedly, firmly; constantly; steadily.

Claudio, I quake,
Lest thou should'st seven winters more respect
Than a perpetual honour. Shakesp. Measf for Measf.

In orchards and gardens we do not so much respect beauty, as variety of ground for fruits, trees, and herbs. Bacon.

2. [Respecter, Fr.] To consider with a lower degree of reverence.

There is nothing more terrible to a guilty heart, than the eye of a respected friend. Sidney.

Whoever tastes, let him with grateful heart
Respect that ancient loyal house. Philips.

I always loved and respected Sir-William. Swift to Gay.

3. To have relation to.

4. To look toward.

The needle doth vary, as it approacheth the pole; whereas, were there such direction from the rocks, upon a nearer approachment, it would more directly respect them. Brown.

Palladius adviseth, the front of his house should so respect the South, that in the first angle it receive the rising rays of the winter sun, and decline a little from the winter setting thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

RESPECT. n. f. [respect, Fr. respectus, Lat.]

1. Regard; attention.

You have too much respect upon the world;
They lose it, that do buy it with much care. Shakesp.

I love
My country's good with a respect more tender
[illegible] Shakesp. Coriol.

2. Reverence; honour.

You know me dutiful, therefore
Let me not shame respect, but give me leave
To take that course by your consent and voice. Shakesp.

Æneas must be drawn a suppliant to Dido, with respect in his gestures, and humility in his eyes. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

I found the king abandon'd to neglect,
Seen without awe, and serv'd without respect. Id.

3. Awful kindness.

He, that will have his son have a respect for him, must have a great reverence for his son. Locke.

The ladies gaſp'd, and ſcarcely could reſpire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire,
The ſanty knights were ſcorch'd. Dryden.

To catch breath.

Till breatheleſs both themſelves aſide retire,
Where foaming wrath, their cruel tuſks they whet,
And trample th' earth the whines they may reſpire. Dryden.

I, a priſoner chain'd, ſcarce freely draw
The air impriſon'd alſo, cloſe and damp,
Unwholeſome draught, but here I feel amends,
In this ſweet blowing, pure, and ſweet,
ſpring born; here leave me to reſpire. Milton.

3. To reſt; to take reſt from toil.

Hark! he ſtrikes the golden lyre,
And liſten'd to the tuneful ghoſts reſpire,
Shades forms and airs! Pope's St. Cecilia.

RESPITE. n. ſ. [reſpit, Fr.]

1. Reprieve, ſuſpenſion of a capital ſentence.

I had hope to ſpend
Quiet, though ſad, the reſpite of that day,
That muſt be mortal to us both. Milton.

Wiſdom and eloquence in vain would plead
One moment's reſpite for the learned head,
Judges of writings and of men have dy'd. Prior.

Pauſe; intervene.

The fox then conſider'd the ape, for to reſpite
Reſpite till morrow to anſwer his deſire. Hubberd T.

This cuſtomary war, which troubleth all the world, giveth little reſpite or breathing time of peace, doth uſually borrow pretence from the neceſſary, to make itſelf appear more

Some pauſe and reſpite only I require,
Till with my tears I ſhall have quench'd my fire. Denham.

To RESPITE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To relieve by a pauſe.

In what bow'r or ſhade
Thou found'ſt him, from the heat of noon reſpir'd,
To reſpite his day-labour with repaſt,
Or with repoſe Milton's Paradiſe Loſt, b. v.

2. [Reſpiter, old Fr.] To ſuſpend, to delay.

An act paſſed for the ſatisfaction of the officers of the king's army, by which they were promiſed payment, upon the publick faith, in November following, till which time they were to reſpite it, and be contented that the common ſoldiers and inferior officers ſhould be ſatisfied upon their diſbanding. Clarendon.

RESPLE'NDENCE } n. ſ. [from reſplendent] Luſtre; bright-
RESPLE'NDENCY. } neſs; ſplendour.

Son! thou in whom my glory I behold
In full reſplendence, heir of all my might. Milton.

To neglect that ſupreme reſplendency, that ſhines in God, for thoſe dim repreſentations of it in the creature, is as abſurd as it were for a Perſian to offer his ſacrifice to a parhelion inſtead of adoring the ſun. Boyle.

RESPLE'NDENT. adj. [reſplendens, Lat.] Bright; ſhining; having a beautiful luſtre.

Rich in commodities, beautiful in ſituation, reſplendent in all glory. Camden's Remains.

The youth with ſongs and rhymes:
Some dance, ſome haul the rope. Dryden.

For rhyme the rudder is of verſes,
With which like ſhips they ſteer their courſes. Hudibras

Such was the news, indeed, but ſongs and rhymes
Prevail as much in theſe hard iron times;
As would a plump of trembling ſows, that riſe
A[illegible] Dryden.

If Cupid throws a ſingle dart,
We make him wound the lover's heart,
But if he takes his bow and quiver,
'Tis ſure he muſt tranſfix the liver;
For rhyme with reaſon may diſpenſe,
And ſound has right to govern ſenſe Pr.

3. Poetry; a poem.

All his manly power it did diſperſe,
As he were warmed with inchanted rhimes,

RIB. n. ſ. [ribbe, Saxon.] A bone in the body.

1. Of theſe there are twenty four in number, viz. twelve on each ſide the twelve vertebræ of the back, they are ſegments of a circle; they grow flat and broad, as they approach the ſternum; but the nearer they are to the vertebræ, the rounder and thicker they are, at which end they have a round head, which, being covered with a cartilage, is received into the ſinus in the bodies of the vertebræ: the ribs, thus articulated, make an acute angle with the lower vertebræ: the ribs have each a ſmall canal or ſinus, which runs along their under ſides, in which lies a nerve, vein, and artery. their extremities, which are faſtened to the ſternum, are cartilaginous, and the cartilages make an obtuſe angle with the bony part of the ribs, this angle reſpects the head; the cartilages are harder in women than in men, that they may better bear the weight of their breasts: the ribs are of two forts; the seven [illegible] called true ribs, because their cartilages [illegible] to the sinus of the sternum, the five lower are [illegible] ribs, because they are softer and shorter, of which only the first is joined to the extremity of the sternum, the cartilaginous extremities of the rest being tied to one another, and thereby leaving a greater space for the dilatation of the stomach and intrails: the last of these short ribs is shorter than all the rest: it is not tied to them, but sometimes to the [illegible] abliquus or cenerus. Quincy

Why do I yield to that suggest on?
Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature! Shakesp. Macbeth.

He open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib, with cordial spirits warm
And life blood streaming fresh. Milton's Par. Loft, b. viii.

He, who first the passage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heart and side,
And ribs of iron arm'd his side,
Who tempted first the briny flood. Dryden's Horace.

2. Any piece of timber or other matter which strengthens the boat.

I should not see the sandy hour glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats,
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Vailing her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

RIBALD. n. f. [ribaud, Fr ribaus, Italian.] A loose, rough, mean, brutal wretch.

That lewd ribaud, with vile lust advanced,
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,
To spoil her dainty corse so fair and sheen. Fairy Queen.

Your ribald nag of Egypt,
The breeze upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sails, and flies. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

The busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, has rous'd the ribald crows,
And driving night will hide our joys no longer. Shakesp.

Ne'er one sprig of laurel grac'd these ribalds,
From sunk'n Bentley down to puling Tibbalds. Pope.

RIBALDRY. n. f. [from ribald, ribaudaire, old Fr.] Mean, lewd, brutal language.

Mr. Cowley asserts, that obscenity has no place in wit; Buckingham says, 'tis an ill sort of wit, which has nothing more to support it than bare-faced ribaldry. Dryden.

The ribaldry of the low characters is different; the reeve, miller, and cook are distinguished from each other. Dryden.

In the same antique room these scenes were wrought,
Embellish'd with good morals and just thought,
True nature in her noblest light you see,
E'er yet debauch'd by modern gallantry
To trifling jests and fulsom ribaldry. Granville.

If the outward profession of religion were once in practice among men in office, the clergy would see their duty and interest in qualifying themselves for lay-conversation, when once they were out of fear of being choaked by ribaldry or propaneness. Swift.

RIBAND. n. f. [ruban, Fr.] A filet of silk; a narrow web of silk, which is worn for ornament.

Quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribands pendent, flaring 'bout her head. Shakesp.

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

See! in the lists they wait the trumpets sound;
Some love device is wrought on every sword,
And every riband bears some mystick word. Granville.

RIBBED. adj. [from rib.]

The base degenerate age requires
Severity and justice in its rigour:
This awes an impious bold offending world. Addison.

6. Rage; cruelty, fury
He at his foe with furious rigour smites,
That strongest oak might seem to overthrow;
The stroke upon his shield so heavy lights,
That to the ground it doubleth him full low. Fairy Queen.
Driven by the circumstances of the times and the temper of the people, more than led by his own disposition to any height and rigour of actions. King Charles.

7. Hardness; not flexibility; solidity; not softness.
The stones the rigor of their kind expel,
And supple into softness as they fell. Dryden.

RI'GOROUS. adj. [from rigour.] Severe; allowing no abatement
He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock
With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial,
Than the severity of public power. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Are these terms hard and rigorous, beyond our capacities to perform? Rogers's Sermons

RI'GOROUSLY. adv. [from rigorous.] Severely; without tenderness or mitigation.
At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd,
For I behold them soften'd, and with tears
Bewailing their excess, all terror hide. Milton.
The people would examine his works more rigorously than himself, and would not forgive the least mistake. Dryden.

RILL. n. f. [rivulus, Lat.] A small brook; a little streamlet.
May thy brimmed waves from this
Their full tribute never miss,
From a thousand petty rills,
That tumble down the snowy hills. Milton.

To RILL. v. n. [from the noun.] To run in small streams.
To Apollo, mighty king, let envy,
Ill judging and verbose, from Lethe's lake,
Draw tuns unmeasurable, while thy favour
Admits to my ambitious thirst
The wholesome draught from Aganippe's spring
Genuine, and with soft murmurs gently rilling
Adown the mountains where thy daughters haunt. Prior.

RI'LLET. n. f. [corrupted from rivulet.] A small stream.

RIM. n. f. [rima, Saxon.]

1. A border, a margin.
It keeps of the same thickness near its centre; while its figure is capable of variation towards the rim. Grew.

2. That which encircles something else.
We may not affirm, that ruptures are confinable unto one side, as the peritoneum or rim of the belly may be broke; or its perforations relaxed in either. Brown's Vulgar Errours
The drum-maker uses it for rims. Mortimer's Husbandry.

RIME. n. f. [hrim, Saxon.]

1. Hoar frost

RIND. n. f. [rinb, Saxon; rinde, Dutch.] Bark; husk.
Therewith a piteous yelling voice was heard,
Crying, O spare with guilty hands to tear
My tender sides in this rough rind embar'd. Fairy Queen.
Within the infant rind of this small flower
Poison hath residence, and medicine power. Shakesp.
These plants are neither red nor polished, when drawn out of the water, till their rind have been taken off. Boyle.
Others whose fruit, burnish'd with golden rind,
Hung amiable. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Thou can'st not touch the freedom of this mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind
Thou hast imanacl'd. Milton.
This monument, thy maiden beauty's due,
High on a plane-tree shall be hung to view;
On the smooth rind the passenger shall see
Thy name engrav'd, and worship Helen's tree. Dryden

To RIND. v. a. [from the noun.] To decorticate; to bark; to husk.

S A B S A C

S, Has in English the ſame hiſſing ſound as in other languages, and unhappily prevails in ſo many of our words that it produces in the ear of a foreigner a continued ſibilation.

In the beginning of words it has invariably its natural and genuine ſound: in the middle it is ſometimes uttered with a ſtronger appulſe of the tongue to the palate, like z, as roſe, reſemble, roſy, oſier, noſe, reſident, buſy, buſineſs. It ſometimes keeps its natural ſound, as looſe, reſignation, for which I know not whether any rules can be given.

In the end of monoſyllables it is ſometimes s, as in this; and ſometimes z, as in as, has; and generally where e ſtands in verbs for th, as gives. It ſeems to be eſtabliſhed as a rule, that no noun ſingular ſhould end with ſ ſingle therefore in words written with diphthongs, and naturally long, an e is nevertheleſs added at the end, as gooſe, houſe, and where the ſyllable is ſhort the ſ is doubled, and was once ſſe, as aſs, anciently aſſe; tenderneſs, anciently tenderneſſe; diſtreſs, anciently diſtreſſe.

SABA'OTH } n. ſ. [An Hebrew word ſignifying reſt, ſabbat,
SABBATH } ſabbaton, Lat.

Holy Lord God of ſabaoth. Common Prayer.

I purpoſe,
And by our holy ſabbath have I ſworn,
To have the due and forfeit of my bond. Shakeſpeare.

Glad we return'd up to the coaſts of light,
Ere ſabbath ev'ning. Milton.

Here ev'ry day was ſabbath: only free
From hours of pray'r, for hours of charity,
Such as the Jews from ſervile toil releaſt,
Where works of mercy were a part of reſt
Such as bleſt angels exerciſe above,
Vary'd with ſacred hymns and acts of love;
Such ſabbaths as that one ſhe now enjoys,
Ev'n that perpetual one, which ſhe employs:
For ſuch viciſſitudes in heav'n there are,
In praiſe alternate, and alternate pray'r. Dryden.

2. Intermiſſion of pain or ſorrow; time of reſt.

Never any ſabbath of releaſe
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel's C. War.

Nor can his bleſſed ſoul look down from heav'n,
Or break th' eternal ſabbath of his reſt,
To ſee her miſeries on earth Dryden.

Peaceful ſleep out the ſabbath of the tomb,
And wake to raptures in a life to come. Pope.

SA'FFLOW n. s. A plant.

An herb they call safflow, or bastard saffron, dyers use for scarlet. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SA'FFRON. n. s. [safran, French, from sapphor, Arabick. It is yellow, according to Davies in his Welsh dictionary crocus, Latin.]

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, which is shaped like a lily, fistulous underneath, the tube widening into six segments, and resting on the foostalk: the pointal rises out of the bottom of the flower, and is divided into three-headed or crested cap flaments; but the empalement afterwards turns to an oblong triangular fruit, divided into three cells, full of roundish seeds. It hath a tuberose root, and long nervous grassy leaves, with a longitudinal furrow through the middle of each. There are spring-flowering crocuses, and those which flower in Autumn. Their seeds are ripe about the latter end of April: the time of planting is in July. About the beginning of September they begin to spire, and sometime after appear the saffron flowers, which are gathered as well before as after they are full blown; and the most proper time for this is early in the morning: the chives being all picked out of the flowers, the next labour about them is to dry them on the kiln: at first they give it a pretty strong heat. The charges and profits attending the culture of saffron, have been computed in the following manner: the rent of an acre of ground, and the expence of manuring it, is reckoned at twenty-three pounds: the value of twenty-six pounds of saffron, the computed produce of an acre in three years, is, at a mean, supposed to be thirty-nine pounds; and consequently the neat profits of an acre of ground, producing saffron, will in three years amount to sixteen pounds. Miller.

Grind your bole and chalk, and five or six shives of saffron. Peacham.

SA'FFRON Bastard. n. s. [carthamus, Latin.] A plant.

This plant agrees with the thistle in most of its characters; but the seeds of it are always destitute of down. It is very much cultivated in Germany for the dyers use, and is brought from thence into England. As it grows it spreads into many branches, each producing a flower at the top of the shoot, which, when fully blown, is cut or pulled off, and dried, and it is the part the dyers use. Miller.

SA'FFRON. adj. Yellow; having the colour of saffron.

Are these your customers?
Did this companion, with the saffron face,
Revel and feast it at my house to-day,
Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut? Shakespeare.

Soon as the white and red nimble finger'd Jane
Had gilt the mountains with her saffron flame,
I sent my men to Circe's house. Chapman's Odyssey.

Now when the rosy morn began to rise,
And way'd her saffron streamer through the skies. Dryden.

SA'LMON n. ſ. [ſalmo, Latin; ſaumon, French.]

The ſalmon is accounted the king of freſh-water fiſh, and breed in rivers relating to the ſea, yet ſo far from it as admits no tincture of brackiſhneſs. He is ſaid to breed or caſt his ſpawn in moſt rivers in the month of Auguſt: ſome ſay that then they dig a hole in a ſafe place in the gravel, and there place the eggs or ſpawn, after the melter has done his natural office, and then cover it over with gravel and ſtones, and ſo leave it to their Creator's protection, who, by a gentle heat which he infuſes into that cold element, makes it brood and beget life in the ſpawn, and to become famlets early in the ſpring: having ſpent their appointed time, and done this natural duty in the freſh waters, they haſte to the ſea before Winter, both the melter and ſpawner. Sir Francis Bacon obſerves the age of a ſalmon exceeds not ten years: his growth is very ſudden, ſo that after he is got into the ſea he becomes from a famlet, not ſo big as a gudgeon, to be a ſalmon, in as ſhort a time as a groſling becomes a gooſe. Walton's Angler.

They poke them with an inſtrument ſomewhat like the ſalmon ſpear. Carew's Survey of Cornwal.

They take ſalmon and trouts by groping and tickling them under the bellies in the pools, where they hover, and ſo throw them on land. Carew.

Saſſify, or the common ſort of goatsbeard, is of a very long oval figure, as if it were cods all over ſtreaked, and engraven in the ſpaces between the ſtreaks, which are ſharp pointed towards the end. Mortimer's Huſbandry.

[illegible] compounded of ſaltneſs and fourneſs.

SALSU'GINOUS. adj. [ſalſugo, Latin.] Salt iſh, ſomewhat ſalt.

The diſtinction of ſalts, whereby they are diſcriminated into acid, volatile, or ſalſuginous, if I may ſo call the fugitive ſalts of animal ſubſtances, and fixed or alcalizate, may appear of much uſe in natural philoſophy. Boyle.

SALT. n. ſ. [ſalt, Gothick; ſealt, Saxon; ſal, Latin; ſel, French.]

1. Salt is a body whoſe two eſſential properties ſeem to be diſſolubility in water, and a pungent ſapor: it is an active incompound ſubſtance: it gives all bodies conſiſtence, and preſerves them from corruption, and occaſions all the variety of taſtes. There are three kinds of ſalts, fixed, volatile, and eſſential: fixed ſalt is drawn by calcining the matter, then boiling the aſhes in a good deal of water, after this the ſolution is filtrated, and all the moiſture evaporated, when the ſalt remains in a dry form at the bottom: this is called a lixivious ſalt. Eſſential ſalt is that drawn chiefly from the parts of animals, and ſome putrified parts of vegetables: it riſes eaſily, and is the moſt volatile of any. The eſſential ſalt is drawn from the juice of plants by cryſtalization. Harris.

Is not diſcourſe, manhood, learning, gentleneſs, virtue and liberality, the ſpice and ſalt that ſeaſons a man? Shakeſp.

He periſhingly has given up,
For certain drops of ſalt, your city Rome,
To his wife and mother Shak. Coriolanus.

Since ſalts differ much, ſome being fixt, ſome volatile, ſome acid, and ſome urinous, the two qualities wherein they agree are, that it is eaſily diſſoluble in water, and affects the palate with a ſapour, good or evil. Boyle.

A particle

A particle of ſalt may be compared to a chaos, being denſe, hard, dry, and earthy in the centre, and rare, ſoft, and moiſt in the circumference. Newton's Opt.

Salts are bodies friable and brittle, in ſome degree pellucid, ſharp or pungent to the taſte, and diſſoluble in water; but after that is evaporated, incorporating, cryſtalizing, and forming themſelves into angular figures. Woodward.

2. Taſte; ſmack.

SA'TIRIST. n. ſ. [from ſatire.] One who writes ſatires.

Wycherly, in his writings, is the ſharpeſt ſatyriſt of his time; but, in his nature, he has all the ſoftneſs of the tendereſt diſpoſitions: in his writings he is ſevere, bold, undertaking; in his nature gentle, modeſt, inoffenſive. Granville.

All vain pretenders have been conſtantly the topicks of the moſt candid ſatyriſts, from the Codrus of Juvenal to the Damon of Boileau Letter to the Publiſher of the Dunciad.

Yet ſoft his nature, though ſevere his lay;
His anger moral, and his wiſdom gay.
Bleſt ſatyriſt! who touch'd the mean ſo true,
As ſhow'd vice had his hate and pity too. Pope.

To SA'TIRIZE v. a. [ſatiriſer, Fr. from ſatire.] To cenſure as in a ſatire.

Covetouſneſs is deſcribed as a veil caſt over the true meaning of the poet, which was to ſatiriſe his prodigality and voluptuouſneſs. Dryden.

Should a writer ſingle out and point his raillery at particular perſons, or ſatiriſe the miſerable, he might be ſure of making a great part of his readers; but muſt be a very ill man if he could pleaſe himſelf Addiſon.

I inſiſt that my Lion's mouth be not defiled with ſcandal; for I would not make uſe of him to revile the human ſpecies, and ſatiriſe his betters. Addiſon's Spectator.

[illegible] as hard to ſatiriſe well a man of diſtinguiſhed vices, as to praiſe well a man of diſtinguiſhed virtues. Swift.

SATISFA'CTION. n. ſ. [ſatisfactio, Latin; ſatisfaction, French.]

SCI'SSION. n. f. [scission, Fr. scissio, Latin.] The act of cutting.

Nerves may be wounded by scission or puncture: the former way they are usually cut through, and wholly cease from action. Wiseman's Surgery.

SCI'SSOR. n. f. [This word is variously written, as it is supposed to be derived by different writers; of whom some write cisors, from cædo, or incido, others scissors, from scindo; and some cisors, cizers, or sizars, ciseaux, Fr.] A small pair of sheers, or blades moveable on a pivot, and intercepting the thing to be cut.

His beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire;
And ever, as it blaz'd, they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair.
My master preaches patience to him, and the while
His man with scissars nicks him for a fool. Shakespeare.
Wanting the scissars, with these hands I'll tear,
If that obstruct my flight, this load of hair. Prior.

When the lawyers and tradesmen brought extravagant bills, sir Roger wore a pair of scissors in his pocket, with which he would snip a quarter of a yard off nicely. Arbuthnot.

SCI'SSURE. n. f. [scissum, Latin.] A crack; a rent, a fissure.

The breach seems like the scissures and ruptures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence. Decay of Piety.

SCLEROTICK. adj. [sclerotique, Fr. σκληρός.] Hard: epithet of one of the coats of the eye.

The ligaments observed in the inside of the sclerotick tunicle of the eye, serve instead of a muscle, by their contraction, to alter the figure of the eye. Ray on the Creation.

To SCOTCH. } piece of wood under it before. Bailey.

To SCOFF. v. n. [schoppen, Dutch.] To treat with insolent ridicule, to treat with contumelious language. With at.

Of two noblemen at the West of England, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, Tell truly, was there ever a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.

There is no greater argument of a light and inconsiderate person, than prophanely to scoff at religion. T[illegible]

Such is love,
And such the laws of his fantastick empire,
The wanton boy delights to bend the mighty,

SCOFF. n. f. [from the verb.] Contemptuous ridicule; expression of scorn; contumelious language.

Our answer therefore to their reasons is no; to their scoffs nothing. Hooker.

With scoffs and scorns, and contumelious taunts,
In open market place produc'd they me. Shakesp. H. VI.

How could men surrender up their reason to flattery, more abusive and reproachful than the rudest scoffs and the sharpest invectives? South.

Some little souls, that have got a smattering of astronomy or chemistry, for want of a due acquaintance with other sciences, make a scoff at them all, in comparison of their favourite science. Watts.

SCOFFER. n. f. [from scoff.] Insolent ridiculer; saucy scorner, contumelious reproacher.

I must tell you friendly in your ear,
Sell when you can, you are not for all markets.
Cry mercy, love him, take his offer,
Foh is foul, being found to be a scoffer. Shakesp.

Divers have herded themselves amongst these profane scoffers, not that they are convinced by their reasons, but terrified by their contumelies. Government of the Tongue.

Consider what the apostle tells these scoffers they were ignorant of, not that there was a deluge, but he tells them that they were ignorant that the heavens and the earth of old were so and so constituted. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

SCOFFINGLY. adv. [from scoffing.] In contempt, with ridicule.

And all apiece this hen-flock scoffingly to the tree chants at Athens. Evelyn's Notes to the

To his single eye, that in his forehead glar'd
Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
A forky staff we dext'rously apply'd,
Which, in the spat'rous socket turning round,
Scoop'd out the big round gelly from its orb. Addison.
It much concerns how to scare
The little race of birds, that hop
From spray to spray, scooping the costliest fruit,
Philips.
The genius of the place.
Or helps th'ambitious hill the heav'n to scale;
Or scoops in circling theatres the vale. Pope.

SCOOPER n. f. [from scoop.] One who scoops.

SCOPE n. f. [scopus, Latin.]
1. Aim; intention; drift.
Your scope is as mine own,
So to enforce or qualify the laws,
As to your soul seems good Shak. Meas. for Measure.
His coming hither hath no further scope
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Enfranchisement immediate on his knees. Shak. R. II.
Had the whole scope of the author been answerable to his title, he would have only undertaken to prove what every man is convinced of, but the drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels. Addison's Freeholder.
2. Thing aimed at, mark, final end.
The scope of all their pleading against man's authority is to overthrow such laws and constitutions in the church, as depending thereupon, if they should therefore be taken away, would leave neither face nor memory of church to continue long in the world. Hooker.
Now was time
To aim their counsels to the fairest scope. Hubberd's Tale.
We should impute the war to the scope at which it aimeth. Raleigh.
He, in what he counsels, and in what excels,
Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair,
And is [illegible] the scope
Of all his aim. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. Room, space, amplitude of intellectual view.
An heroick poet is not tied to a bare representation of what is true, but that he might let himself loose to visionary objects, which may give him a freer scope for imagination. Dryden.
These theorems being admitted into opticks, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner, not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refraction. Newton's Opt.
4. Liberty; freedom from restraint.
If this constrain them to grant that their axiom is not to take any place, save in those things only where the church hath larger scope, it resteth that they search out some stronger reason. Hooker.
Ah, cut my lace asunder,
That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I swoon with this dead killing news. Shakespeare.
5. Liberty beyond just limits; licence.
Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope,
'Twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them,
For what I bid them do. Shakespeare.
Being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working. Shakesp. Henry IV.
6. Act of riot; sally.
As furiest is the father of much fast,
So every scope, by the immoderate use,
Turns to restraint Shakespeare.

SEA. n. s. [see, Saxon; zee, or zee, Dutch.]

1. The ocean; the water opposed to the land.
Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood
Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather
The multitudinous sea incarnadine,
Making the green one red. Shakesp. Macbeth.
The rivers run into the sea. Common.
He made the sea, and all that is therein. Ex. xx. 11.
So do the winds and thunders cleanse the air,
So working seas settle and purge the wine. Davies.
Amphibious between sea and land
The river horse. Milton.

Same leviathan,
Haply flumb'ring on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea. Milton.

Small fragments of shells, broken by storms on some shores, are used for manuring of sea land. Woodward.

They put to sea with a fleet of three hundred sail. Arbuthn.

Sea-racing dolphins are train'd for our motion,
Moony tides swelling to roll us ashore. Dryden's Albion.

But like a rock unmov'd, a rock that braves
The raging tempest, and the rising waves,
Propp'd on himself he stands: his solid sides
Wash off the sea-weeds, and the founding tides. Dryden.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world. Bentley.

[illegible] the sea,
[illegible] d his strain,
While Argo saw her kindred trees

SELF. pronoun. plur. ſelves. [ſilba, Gothick; ſylf, ſylfa, Sax. ſelf, ſelve, Dutch.]

1. Its primary ſignification ſeems to be that of an adjective: very; particular; this above others; ſometimes, one's own.

Shoot another arrow that ſelf way
Which you did ſhoot the firſt Shakeſp. Merch. of Ven.
The cruel miniſters, by ſelf and violent hands,
On theſe ſelf hills the air is ſo thin, that it is not ſufficient to bear up the body of a bird. Raleigh.
At that ſelf moment enters Palamon
The gate of Venus. Dryden.

2. It is united both to the perſonal pronouns, and to the neuter pronoun it, and is always added when they are uſed reciprocally, or return upon themſelves: as, I did not hurt him, he hurt himſelf, the people hiſs me, but I clap myſelf, thou loveſt thyſelf, though the world ſcorns thee.

Self is that conſcious thinking thing, which is ſenſible or conſcious of pleaſure and pain, capable of happineſs and miſery, and ſo is concerned for itſelf, as far as that conſciouſneſs extends. Locke.

3. It is ſometimes uſed emphatically in the nominative caſe, as, myſelf will decide it, I myſelf will come, himſelf ſhall revenge [illegible] perſonal, is chiefly poetical.

4. Compounded with him, a pronoun ſubſtantive, ſelf is in appearance an adjective, joined to my, thy, our, your, pronoun adjectives, it ſeems a ſubſtantive. Even when compounded with him it is at laſt found to be a ſubſtantive, by its variation in the plural, contrary to the nature of Engliſh adjectives, as himſelf, themſelves.

5. Ourſelf, himſelf, themſelves, and the reſt, may, contrary to the analogy of my, him, them, be uſed as nominatives.

6. It often adds only emphaſis and force to the pronoun with which it is compounded.

Next to the knowledge of God, this knowledge of our ſelves ſeems moſt worthy of our endeavour. Hale.

The fondneſs we have for ſelf, and the relation which other things have to our ſelves, furniſhes another long rank of prejudices. Watts.

7. It ſignifies the individual, as ſubject to his own contemplation or action.

The ſpark of noble courage now awake,
And ſtrive your excellent ſelf to excel. Fairy Queen.
Since conſciouſneſs always accompanies thinking, and it is that that makes every one to be what he calls ſelf, and thereby diſtinguiſhes himſelf from all other thinking things; in this alone conſiſts perſonal identity, i. e. the ſameneſs of a rational being. Locke.
It is by the conſciouſneſs it has of its preſent thoughts and actions, that it is ſelf to it ſelf now, and ſo will be the ſame ſelf, as far as the ſame conſciouſneſs can extend to actions paſt or to come. Locke.

8. It is much uſed in compoſition, which it is proper to explain

by a train of examples. It is to be obſerved, that its compoſit on in Shakeſpeare is often harſh.

Then held ſhe her tongue, and caſt down a ſelf accuſing look, finding that in her ſelf ſhe had ſhot out of the bow of her affection a more quick opening of her mind, than ſhe minded to have done. Sidney.

Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy miſt
Of our ſelf love, ſo paſſions do deceive,
We think they hurt when moſt they do aſſiſt. Sidney.
'Tis Strephon's plaining voice him nearer drew,
Where by his words his ſelf-like caſe he knew Sidney.

Confronted him with ſelf-compariſons,
Point againſt point rebellious, arm 'gainſt arm,
Curbing his lavith ſpirit. Shak. Macbeth.
Self love, my liege, is not ſo vile a ſin
As ſelf neglecting. Shakeſ. Henry V.
Anger is like
A full hot horſe, who, being allow'd his way,
Self mettle tires him.
His lords deſire him to have borne
His bruiſed helmet and his bended ſword
Before him through the city; he forbids it,
Being free from vainneſs and ſelf-glorious pride.
You promiſed
To lay aſide ſelf harming heavineſs,
And entertain a cheerful diſpoſition. Shakeſ. Rich. III.

In their anger they ſlew a man, and in their ſelf-will they digged down a wall. Gen. xlix.

Magnanimous, to correſpond with heav'n. Milton.

So virtue giv'n for loſt,
Depreſt and overthrown, as ſeem'd,
Like that ſelf-begotten bird,
In th' Arabian woods emboſt,
That no ſecond knows nor third,
And lay ere while a holocauſt,
From out her aſhy womb now teem'd. Milton's Agon.

He ſorrows now, repents, and prays contrite,
My motions in him longer than they move,
His heart I know how variable and vain,

Seneca approves this ſelf-homicide Hakewill.

Thyſelf from flatt'ring ſelf conceit defend,
Nor what thou do'ſt not know, to know pretend. Denham.

Men had better own their ignorance than advance doctrines which are ſelf-contradictory. Spectator.

Light, which of all bodies is neareſt allied to ſpirit, is alſo moſt diffuſive and ſelf-communicative. Norris.

Thus we ſee in bodies, the more of them they are to ſpirit in ſubtlety and refinement, the more ſpreading are they and ſelf-diffuſive. Norris.

God, who is an abſolute ſpiritual act, and who is ſuch a pure light as in which there is no darkneſs, muſt needs be infinitely ſelf-imparting and communicative. Norris.

Every animal is conſcious of ſome individual, ſelf-moving, ſelf-determining principle. Pope and Arbuthn. Mart. Scrib.

No man will pretend to be a gentleman: he is a tradeſman, a ſelf ſeeking wretch. Arbuthn. John Bull.

By the baſis of ſelf opinion mov'd,
We wiſh to charm, and ſeek to be belov'd. Prior.

Living and underſtanding ſubſtances do moſt clearly demonſtrate to philoſophical inquirers the neceſſary ſelf-exiſtence, power, wiſdom, and beneficence of their maker.
Bentley's Sermons.

If it can intrinſically ſtir itſelf, and either commence or alter its courſe, it muſt have a principle of ſelf-activity, which is life and ſenſe. Bentley's Sermons.

This deſire of exiſtence is a natural affection of the ſoul; 'tis ſelf preſervation in the higheſt and trueſt meaning. Bentley.

The philoſophers, and even the Epicureans, maintained the ſelf ſufficiency of the Godhead, and ſeldom or never ſacrificed at all. Bentley's Sermons.

Matter is not endued with ſelf-motion, nor with a power to alter the courſe in which it is put: it is merely paſſive, and muſt ever continue in that ſtate it is ſettled in. Cheyne.

The eldeſt law of nature. Rowe's Amiable Stepmother.

His labour and ſtudy would have ſhewn his early miſtakes, and cured him of ſelf-flattering deluſions. Watts.

I heard in Crete, this iſland's name,
For 'twas in Crete, my native ſoil, I came Self-baniſh'd thence. Pope's Odyſſey.

Achilles's courage is furious and untractable; that of Ajax is heavy and ſelf-confiding. Pope.

I doom, to fix the gallant ſhip,
A mark of vengeance on the fable deep;
To warn the thoughtleſs ſelf-confiding train,
No more unlicens'd thus to brave the main. Pope.

What is looſe love? a tranſient guſt,
A vapour fed from wild deſire,
A wand'ring ſelf-conſuming fire. Pope.

In dubious thought the king awaits,
And ſelf conſidering, as he ſtands, debates.
Is mighty Jove's command,
Have I trod this pleaſant land,
For why ſelf-mov'd with weary wing would ſweep

They who reach Parnaſſus' lofty crown,
Employ their pains to ſpurn ſome others down,
And while ſelf-love each jealous writer rides,
Contending wits become the ſport of fools. Pope.

It may be thought that Ulyſſes here is too oſtentatious, and that he dwells more than modeſty allows upon his own accompliſhments; but ſelf-praiſe is ſometimes no ſaun. Broome.

No wonder ſuch a ſpirit, in ſuch a ſituation, is provoked beyond the regards of reaſon or ſelf-conviction. Swift.

SE'NNEAL. n. ſ. [branetta, Latin.] A plant. The ſame with SANICLE, which ſee.

SE'LFISH. adj. [from ſelf.] Attentive only to one's own intereſt; void of regard for others.

What could the moſt aſpiring ſelfiſh man deſire more, were he to form the notion of a being to whom he would recommend himſelf, than ſuch a knowledge as can diſcover the leaſt appearance of perfection, and ſuch a goodneſs as will proportion a reward to it? Addiſon's Spectator.

Paſſions, though ſelfiſh, if their means be fair,
[illegible]
Thoſe that imparted court a nobler aim,
Exalt their kind, and take ſome virtue's name. Pope.

SE'LFISHNESS. n. ſ. [from ſelfiſh.] Attention to one's own intereſt, without any regard to others; ſelf-love.

This ſubdued love, being, by an intimate conjunction with its object, throughly refined from all baſe droſs of ſelfiſhneſs and intereſt, nobly begets a perfect ſubmiſſion of our wills to the will of God. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

SE'LFISHLY. adv. [from ſelfiſh.] With regard only to his own intereſt, without love of others.

He can your merit ſelfiſhly approve,
And ſhew the ſenſe of it without the love. Pope.

SE'LFSAME. adj. [ſelf and ſame.] Numerically the ſame.

I have no great cauſe to look for other than the ſelf-ſame portion and lot, which your manner hath been hitherto to lay on them that concur not in opinion with you. Hooker, Pref.

Flight purſu'd one way the ſelf-ſame hour. Milton.

I have been baſe,
Baſe even to him from whom I did receive
All that a ſon could to a parent give Behold me puniſh'd in the ſelf ſame kind;
'Tis ingrateful does a more ungrateful find. Dryden.

SE'LION. n. ſ. [ſelio, low Latin.] A ridge of land. Ainſw.

SELL. pronoun. [for ſelf.] Sell is retained in Scotland for ſelf, and ſells in the plural for ſelves.

SE'MBLABLY. adv. [from ſemblable.] With reſemblance.

A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt,
Semblably furniſh'd like the king himſelf. Shakeſp. H. IV.

SE'MBLANCE. n. ſ. [ſemblance, Fr. from ſemblant.]

1. Reſemblance, reſemblance, ſimilitude; repreſentation.

Sir, what Henry with her wond'rous praiſe,
Bethink thee on her virtues, that ſurmount
Her natural graces, that extinguiſh art,
Repeat their ſemblance often. Shakeſpeare.

He's but the ſign and ſemblance of her honour:
Behold how like a maid ſhe blaſhes here!
O, what authority and ſhew of truth
Can cunning ſin cover itſelf withal! Shakeſpeare.

He with high words, that bore
Semblance of worth, not ſubſtance, gently raiſed
Their fainting courage, and diſpell'd their fears. Milton.

This laſt effort brought forth the opinion, that theſe bodies are not what they ſeem to be; that they are no ſhells, but mere ſportings of active nature, and only ſemblances or imitations of ſhells. Woodward.

It is not his meaning that we put on the outward face and ſemblance of virtue, only to conceal and diſguiſe our vice. Reg.

2. Appearance; ſhow; figure.

Be you the ſoldier, for you likeſt are,
For manly ſemblance and for ſkill in war. Spenſer.

Their ſemblance kind, and mind-like geſtures were,
Peace in their hands, and friendſhip in their face. Fanſax.

All that fair and good in thy divine
Semblance, and in thy beauty's heav'nly ray,
United I beheld. Mult. Par. Reſt.

SE'MBLANT. adj. [ſemblant, French.] Like; reſembling; having the appearance of any thing. Little uſed.

In deſpite of age, of impious flame,
And eating time, thy picture, like thy fame,
Entire may laſt; that as their eyes ſurvey
The ſemblant ſhade, men yet unborn may ſay,
Thus great, thus gracious look'd Britannia's queen;
Her brow thus ſmooth, her look was thus ſerene. Prior.

SE'MBLANT. n. ſ. Show; figure, reſemblance, repreſentation. Not in uſe.

Her purpoſe was not ſuch as ſhe did feign,
Nor yet her perſon ſuch as it was ſeen;
But under ſimple ſhew, and ſemblant plain,
Lurks falſe Dueſſa, ſecretly unſeen. Fairy Queen.

SE'MBLATIVE. adj. [from ſemblant.] Suitable, accommodate, fit; reſembling.

Diana's lip
Is not more ſmooth and ruby; thy ſmall pipe
Is as the maiden's organ, ſhrill and ſound;
And all is ſemblative a woman's part. Shak. Twelfth Night.

To SE'MBLE. v. n. [ſembler, French.] To repreſent; to make a likeneſs. Little uſed.

Let Europe, ſav'd, the column high erect,
Than Trajan's higher, or than Antonine's,
Where ſembling art may carve the fair effect,
And full atchievement of thy great deſigns. Prior.

When Homer would represent any agreeable object, he makes use of the smoothest vowels and most flowing semivowels. Broome's Notes to the Odyssey.

SE'MPERVIVE. n. f. [semper and vivus, Latin, that is, always alive.] A plant.

The greater sempervive will put out branches two or three years, but they wrap the root in an oil cloth once in half a year. Bacon.

SEMPITE'RNAL. adj. [sempiternel, Fr. sempiternus, from semper and æternus, Latin.]

1. Eternal in futurity; having beginning, but no end.

Those, though they suppose the world not to be eternal, a parte ante, are not contented to suppose it to be sempiternal, or eternal a parte post, but will carry up the creation of the world to an immense antiquity. Hale.

2. In poetry it is often simply for eternal.

Should we the long depending scale ascend
Of sons and fathers, will it never end?
If 'twill, then must we through the order run,
To some one man whose being ne'er began;
If that one man was sempiternal, why
Did he, since independant, ever die? Blackmore.

SEMPITE'RNITY. n. f. [sempiternitas, Latin.] Future duration without end.

The future eternity, or sempiternity of the world, being admitted, though the eternity a parte ante be denied, there will be a future infinity for the emanation of the divine goodness. Hale.

SE'MSTRESS. n. f. [reamerepe, Saxon.] A woman whose business is to sew, a woman who lives by her needle.

Two hundred sempstresses were employed to make me shirts, and linnen for bed and table, which they were forced to quilt together in several folds. Gulliver's Travels.

Nothing wants, but that thy ſhape
Like his, and colour ſerpentine, may ſhew
Thy inward fraud. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

The figures and their parts ought to have a ſerpentine and flaming form naturally: theſe ſorts of outlines have, I know not what of life and ſeeming motion in them, which very much reſembles the activity of the flame and ſerpent. Dryden.

2. Winding like a ſerpent; anfractuous.

Perfect a circle, or maintain his way
One inch direct, but where he roſe to-day
He comes no more, but with a cozening line
Steers by that point, and ſo is ſerpentine. Donne.

Has band the adorned firmament diſplay'd,
Thoſe ſerpentine, yet conſtant motions made. Sandys.

How many ſpacious countries does the Rhine,
In winding barks, and mazes ſerpentine,
Traverſe, before he ſpits in Belgia's plain,
And, loſt in ſand, creeps to the German main? Buckinghamſhire.

SE'RPENTINE. n. ſ. An herb. Ainſworth.

SE'RPENTINE Stone. n. ſ.

There were three ſpecies of this ſtone known among the ancients, all reſembling one another, and celebrated for the ſame virtues. They were all of the marble kind: the one was green, variegated with ſpots of black, thence called the black ophites; another, called the white ophites, was green alſo, but variegated with ſpots of white: the third was called tephria, and was of a grey colour, variegated with ſmall black ſpots. The firſt ſpecies was chiefly uſed in medicine, and found by the ancients only in Egypt; but it is frequent in the deſarts of Arabia, in the iſlands of the Archipelago, in Italy, and we have whole quarries of it in Wales. The ancients tell us, that it was a certain remedy againſt the poiſon of the bite of ſerpents; but it is now juſtly rejected. Hill's Mat. Med.

Accept in good part a bottle made of a ſerpentine ſtone, which hath the quality to give any wine or water, that ſhall be infuſed therein for four and twenty hours, the taſte and operation of the ſpaw-water, and is very medicinable for the cure of the ſpleen and gravel. Wotton.

SERVITUDE. n. f. [servitude, French; servitus, Latin.]

1. Slavery; state of a slave; dependance.

Aristotle speaketh of men, whom nature hath framed for the state of servitude, saying, they have reason so far forth as to conceive when others direct them Hooker.

You would have sold your king to slaughter,
His princes and his peers to servitude,
His subjects to oppression and contempt. Shakesp. Hen V.

Though it is necessary, that some persons in the world should be in love with a splendid servitude, yet certainly they must be much beholding to their own fancy, that they can be pleased at it; for he that rises up early, and goes to bed late, only to receive addresses, is really as much abridged in his freedom, as he that waits to present one. South Sermons.

Unjustly thou depray'st it with the name
Of servitude, to serve whom God ordains,
Or nature: God and nature bid the same,
When he who rules is worthiest. Milton.

To pay my penance till my years expire.

5. Dark part of a picture

A shade was a diminution of the first and second light. The first light is that which proceeds immediately from a lightned body, as the beams of the sun. The second is an accidental light spreading itself into the air or medium proceeding from the other. Shadows are threefold; the first is a single shadow, and the least of all, and is proper to the plain surface where it is not wholly possessed of the light. The second is the double shadow, and it is used when the surface begins once to forsake your eye, as in columns. The third shadow is made by crossing over your double shadow again, which darkneth by a third part. It is used for the smoak shadow, and farthest from the light, as in gulfs, wells, and caves. Peacham.

After great lights there must be great shadows. Dryden.

6. Any thing perceptible only to the sight, a ghost; a spirit, or the

Hence, terrible shadow!
Unreal mock'ry, hence Shak.

7. An imperfect and faint representation.

If resistance might be call'd that shadow seems, Milt.

In the glorious lights of heaven we perceive a shadow of his divine countenance Raleigh.

Without

Without the least impulse or shadow of fate Milton
the creatures are particular excellencies scattered, some shadows of the divine perfections. Tillotson.

5 Inseparable companion
Sin and her shadow, death. Milton.
I hear my shadow
Now I wish me be[illegible]. Milton.
shadow of that destined seed. Milton.

10 Protection, shelter, favour
Keep me under the shadow of thy wings. Psalms.

† SHADOW v. a. [from the noun]

1 To cover with opacity.
The warlike elf much wondered at this tree,
So fair and great, that shadowed all the ground. Fa. Q.
The Assyrian was a cedar with fair branches, and with a shadowing shroud. Ezek. xxxi 3.

2 To cloud; to darken
Mistake me not for my complexion,
The nonpareil fairy of the burning sun
To whom I am a neighbour Shakesp.

3 To make cool or gently gloomy by interception of the light or heat
A gentle south-west wind comes creeping over flowery fields and shadows waters in the extreme heat of summer. Sidney.

4 To conceal under cover, to hide; to screen
Let every soldier hew him down a bough,
And bear't before him; thereby shall we shadow
The number of our host, and make discovery
Err in report of us. Shakesp.

5 To protect, to screen from danger, to shroud
God shall forgive you Cœur de Lion's death,
The rather, that you give his offspring life,
Shadowing their right under your wings of war. Shakesp.
[illegible]ations of colour, or light
Turnsole is made of old linnen rags dried, and laid in a[illegible]r of vinegar, and set over a chafing dish of coals till it [illegible]n wring it into a shell, and put it into a little gum[illegible]it is good to shadow carnations, and all yellows. Bacon.
From a round globe of any uniform colour, the idea imprinted in our mind is of a flat circle, variously shadowed with [illegible]nt degrees of light coming to our eyes Locke.
More broken scene, made up of an infinite variety of inequalities and shadowings, that naturally arise from an agreeable mixture of hills, groves, and valleys. Addis.

7 To paint in obscure colours.
If the parts be too much distant, so that there be void spaces which are deeply shadowed, then place in those voids some fold to make a joining of the parts. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

[illegible]
Whereat I wak'd and found
Before mine eyes all real, as the dream
Had lively shadowed. Milton Parad. Lost.
Aeneas is shadowed in the person of Æneas. Dryd.
I have shadowed some part of your virtues under another name. Dryd.

9 To represent typically.
Many times there are three things said to make up the sub[illegible]a sacrament; namely, the grace which is thereby offered, the element which shadoweth or signifieth grace, and the word which expresseth what is done by the element. Hook.
The shield being to shield the body from weapons, apt to shadow out to us the countenance of the emperor, which made him proof to all the attacks of pleasure. Addison.

SHADOWY. adj [from shadow.]

Than wanton steps of the face of things. Milton.

3 Family representative, typical
When they see
Law can subdue sin, but not remove
Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats; they may conclude [illegible]and more precious must be paid for man. Milt.
[illegible]al, unreal
[illegible] has brought into his poems two actors of a shadowy and fantastic nature, in the persons of sin and death; by which he hath interwoven a fable very beautiful allegory. Addis.

5 Dark, opake
By command, e're yet dim night
[illegible]shadowy wings, I am to haste
[illegible]. Parad. Lost.

SHADY. adj [from shade.]

1 Full of shade, gloomy
[illegible] The wanton
[illegible]and to their shady covert hied
Tunes her nocturnal note. Milt. Parad Lost.
Since [illegible]e one you sing your happy loves,
And Arcas [illegible]s the shady groves. Dry

2 Secure from the glare of light, or sultriness of heat
Cast it also that you may have rooms shady for summer and warm for winter Bacon.

SHAFT. n. s. [sceapt, Saxon]

1 An arrow; a missive weapon.
To pierce pursuing shield,
By parents trained, the Parthians wood are taught,
With shafts shot out from their back-turned bow Sidney.
Who in the spring, from the new sun,
Already has a fever got,
Too late begins those shafts to shun,
Which Phœbus thro' his veins has shot. Waller.
They are both the archer and shaft taking aim afar off, and then shooting themselves directly upon the desired mark. More.
So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow
With vigour drawn, must send the shaft below. Dryd.
O'er thee the secret shaft
That wastes at midnight, or th'andreaded hour
Of noon, flies harmless. Thomson.

2 [Shaft, Dutch.] A narrow, deep, perpendicular pit.
They sink a shaft or pit of six foot in length. Carew.
The fulminating damp, upon its accension, gives a crack like the report of a gun, and makes an explosion so forcible as to kill the miners, and force bodies of great weight from the bottom of the pit up through the shaft. Woodward.
Suppose a tube, or as the miners call it, a shaft, were sunk from the surface of the earth to the center. Arbuthnot.

3 Any thing strait; the spire of a church.
Practise to draw small and easy things, as a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple. Peacham.

SHAG n. s. [sceacga, Saxon]

1 Rough wooly
Foil often like a shag hair'd crafty kern,
Hath he conversed with the enemy;
And given me notice of their villanies. Shakesp.
Where is your husband?
He's a traitor.
Thou lie'st thou shag-ear'd villain Shakesp.
From the shag of his body, the shape of his legs, his having little or no tail, the slowness of his gate, and his climbing up of trees, he seems to come near the bear kind. Grew.
True Witney broad cloth, with its shag unshorn,
Be this the horseman's fence. Gay.

2 A kind of cloth.

1 Ruggedly, hairy
They change their hue, with haggar'd eyes they stare,
Lean are their looks, and shagged are their hair. Dryden.
A lion's case he wears;
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin,
The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin Dryden.
From the frosty north
The early valiant Swede draws forth his wings,
In battalious array, while Volga's stream
Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad
Her borderers; on mutual slaughter bent. Philips.

2 Rough, rugged.
They pluck'd the seated hills with all their load,
Rocks, waters, woods, and by the shaggy tops
Uplifting bore them in their hands. Milt. Parad. Lost.
There, where very desolation dwells,
By grots and caverns shagg'd with horrid shades,
She may pass on with unaltered majesty,
Be it not done in pride. Milt.
Through Eden went a river large,
Nor chang'd its course, but through the shaggy hill
Pass'd underneath engulph'd. Milton.
How would the old king smile
To see you weigh the paws when tip'd with gold,
And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders. Addis.
Ye rugged rocks! which how knees have worn,
Ye grots and caverns shagg'd with horrid thorn P[illegible]

SHAKE. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Concuſſion.

If that thy fame with ev'ry toy be poſ'd,
'Tis a thin web, which poiſonous fancies make;
But the great ſoldier's honour was compoſ'd
Of thicker ſtuff, which could endure a ſhake
Wiſdom packs friends, civility plays the reſt,
A toy ſhunn'd cleanly paſſeth with thee beſt. Herbert.

The freeholder is the baſis of all other titles: this is the ſubſtantial ſtock, without which they are no more than bloſſoms that would fall away with every ſhake of wind. Addiſon

2. Vibratory motion.

Several of his countrymen probably lived within the ſhake of the earthquake, and the ſhadow of the eclipſe, which are recorded by this author. Addiſon.

He ſaid, the ſhaker of the earth replies. Pope's Odyſſey.

SHALE. n. ſ. [Corrupted, I think, for ſhell.] A huſk, the caſe of ſeeds in ſiliquous plants.

Behold yon poor and ſtarved band,
And your fair ſhew ſhall ſuck away their ſouls,
Leaving them but the ſhales and huſks of men. Shakeſp.

SHALL. v. defective. [ſceal, Sax. is originally I owe, or I ought. In Chaucer, the ſouthe I ſhal to God, means the ſooth I owe to God: thence it became a ſign of the future tenſe. The French uſe devoir, dois, doit, in the ſame manner, with a kind of future ſignification; and the Swedes have ſkall, and the Iſlanders ſkal, in the ſame ſenſe. It has no tenſes but ſhall future, and ſhould paſt.

The explanation of ſhall, which foreigners and provincials confound with will, is not eaſy; and the difficulty is increaſed by the poets, who ſometimes give to ſhall an emphatical ſenſe of will: but I ſhall endeavour, craſſi Minervâ, to ſhow the meaning of ſhall in the future tenſe.

1. I SHALL love. It will ſo happen that I muſt love, I am reſolved to love.

2. SHALL I love? Will it be permitted me to love? Will you permit me to love? Will it happen that I muſt love?

3. Thou SHALT love. I command thee to love; it is permitted thee to love: [in poetry or ſolemn diction:] it will happen that thou muſt love.

4. SHALT thou love? Will it happen that thou muſt love? Will it be permitted to thee to love?

5. He SHALL love. It will happen that he muſt love, it is commanded him that he love.

It is a mind, that ſhall remain a poiſon where it is.
——— Shall remain
Hear you this triton of the minnows? Mark you
His abſolute ſhall? Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

See Romulus the great:
This prince a prieſteſs of your blood ſhall bear,
And like his ſire in arms he ſhall appear. Dryden's Æn.

That he ſhall receive no benefit from Chriſt, is the aſſumption whereon all his deſpair is founded, and the one way of removing this diſmal apprehenſion, is to convince him that Chriſt's death, and the benefits thereof, either do, or, if he perform the condition required of him, ſhall certainly belong to him. Hammond's Fundamentals

6. SHALL he love? Is it permitted him to love? In ſolemn language, Will it happen that he muſt love?

7. The plural perſons follow the ſignification of the ſingulars.

And Scipio trail an Iriſh purple plaid. Swift.

SHA'LLOP. n. ſ. [chaloupe, French.] A ſmall boat.

You were reſolved, after your arrival into Oroonoque, to paſs to the mine; and, to that end, you deſired to have ſir John Fearne's ſhallop. I do not allow of that courſe, becauſe ye cannot land ſo ſecretly but that ſome Indians on the river ſide may diſcover you, who giving knowledge of your paſſage to the Spaniards, you may be cut off before you can recover your boat. Raleigh.

There with your ſhallop ſtay
The game's not loſt, I have one card to play. Waller.

Our hero ſet
In a ſmall ſhallop, fortune in his debt;
So near a hope of crowns and ſcepters, more
Than ever Priam, when he flouriſh'd, wore. Waller.

SHA'LLOW adj. [This word is probably compounded of ſhoal and low.]

1. Not deep; having the bottom at no great diſtance from the ſurface or edge.

I had been drowned, but that the ſhore was ſhelvy and ſhallow; a death that I abhor. Shakeſ. Merry Wives of Windſ.

That inundation, though it were ſhallow, had a long continuance, whereby they of the vale, that were not drowned, periſhed for want of food. Bacon.

The like opinion he held of Meotis Paludis, that by the floods of Tanais, and earth brought down thereby, it grew obſervably ſhallower in his days, and would in proceſs of time become a firm land. Brown's Vulgar Errours

I am made a ſhallow forded ſtream,
Seen to the bottom: all my clearneſs ſcorn'd,
And all my faults expos'd. Dryden's All for Love

The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.

In ſhallow furrows vines ſecurely grow. Dryden.

Afraid of him? A very fhallow monfter,
The man i'th moon! A moft poor credulous monfter. Shak.

The king was neither fo fhallow nor fo ill advertifed as not to perceive the intention of the French king, for the inveſting ramfelf of Britaigne. Bacon's Henry VII.

Uncertain and unfettled he remains,
Deep verſt in books, and fhallow in himſelf Milton.

One would no more wonder to fee the moſt fhallow nation of Europe the moſt vain, than to find the moſt empty fellows in every nation more conceited than the reſt. Addiſon.

3. Not deep of ſound.

If a virginal were made with a double concave, the one all the length of the virginal, and the other at the end of the ſtrings, as the harp hath, it muſt make the ſound perfecter, and not ſo fhallow and jarring. Bacon.

SHALLOW. n. ſ. [from the adjective.] A ſhelf, a ſand, a flat, a ſhoal, a place where the water is not deep.

I ſhould not ſee the ſandy hour glaſs run,
But I ſhould think of fhallows and of flats,
And ſee my wealthy Andrew dock'd in ſand,
Vailing her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiſs her burial. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

A ſwift ſtream is not heard in the channel, but upon fhallows of gravel. Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory.

Having but newly left thoſe grammatick flats and fhallows, where they ſtuck unreaſonably, to learn a few words with lamentable conſtruction, and now on the ſudden tranſported, to be toſt with their unbaliaſted wits in fathomleſs and unquiet deeps of controverſy, they do grow into hatred of learning. Milt.

You that ſo oft have ſounded
And fathom'd all his thoughts, that know the deeps
And fhallows of his heart, ſhould need no inſtruments
To advance your ends. Denham.

In arms of the ſea, and among iſlands, there is no great depth, and ſome places are plain fhallows. Burnet.

He ſounds and fathoms him, to find
The fhallows of his ſoul. Dryd. Spaniſh Fryar.

The wary Dutch
Behind their treach'rous fhallows now withdraw,
And there lay ſnares to catch the Britiſh hoſt Dryden.

Three more fierce Eurus in his angry mood

Their ſpawn being lighter than the water, there it would not ſink to the bottom, but be buoyed up by it, and carried away to the ſhallows. Ray on the Creation.

With the uſe of diligence, and prudent conduct, he may ſhun both rocks and ſhallows. Norris.

The ſea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loſs to the world, and muſt we now have an ocean of mere flats and ſhallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

SHALLOWBRAINED. adj. [ſhallow and brain.] Fooliſh, futile, trifling, empty.

It cannot but be matter of juſt indignation to all good men to ſee a company of lewd ſhallowbrained huffs making atheiſm, and contempt of religion, the ſole badge of wit. South.

SHA'LLOWLY adv. [from ſhallow.]

1. With no great depth.

The road lieth open on the graſs, or but ſhallowly covered. Carew.

2. Simply, fooliſhly.
